Dear Sir:
Thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to complete my high school education. I am very proud of my diploma and I know the knowledge I have gained will help me in many ways.

I appreciate your kindness and your help with my studies. I will be glad to recommend United Schools of America to others.

Mrs. Patricia Phillips

Dear Sir:

I wish to thank you for giving me an opportunity to achieve my diploma. I am now taking a course in Computer programming. Thank God for you all.

Mrs. Elouise Washington

Dear Sir:
I received my diploma a few weeks ago and I can't begin to tell how proud I am of it. It really makes you feel good to know that you have finished high school.

I took your correspondence course which was very good and I enjoyed it very much.

I haven't made a definite decision yet, but I'm thinking about attending with some college to go to college.

Sharon Danner

very much.

Dear Sir:

Permit me to express my sincere thanks and gratitude to your School and staff for the kind attention and consideration given to me, during my course of studies.

Lindsey Gootachian

Dear Sir:

Thank you for your kind letter. I am very happy that I was able to complete my studies at home and receive my diploma.

When I began my work with the courses, I was not too confident that I would be able to finish. My attitude toward school was not the best; in fact, I had dropped out of school.

Mrs. Dorothy Dale Slack

Dear Sir:

My name is Deanne Cooper and my student number is 1072.

Yesterday I sent in the last of the lessons of the home study course. I have done well in all the ones that I have received graded. I am sure I have done well in all the others also. So, God willing, in a couple of weeks I will be hanging my diploma on the wall of my room.

I am very proud of this accomplishment. I wish to say that I feel the home study plan is wonderful. I found by studying a little each day that I easily accomplished another step toward the future. The payment plan is wonderful.

Deanne Cooper

Gentlemen:

I am sending a snapshot of myself to you for your files and I would like to inform you that I have gone from a 2nd bracket paying job to a 6th bracket along with myself. I work for. They pay me as the plant. I was very proud of my success. And I would like to thank you and your staff for helping me get one of the most prized possessions a man can have.

SECRET ADMIRER

Dear Editor:

I have been a reader of your magazines since I was a teenager, and I'm now 29. My mother didn't like the idea of my reading them, but I sneaked around and read them anyway. After years of reading so much about other people's troubled lives, I didn't get married.

I get lonely at times. I feel young people, both male and female, ought to read Soul Confessions, Hep, Jive and BRONZE THRILLS because they can learn a lot from these magazines, as I did.

I am hard of hearing, and reading stories such as you put in your magazines has given me the knowledge I have about life. I have been giving my old magazines to young girls, and they say what they read in them makes them think. Some of them say their mothers don't approve of their reading them, but I tell them we all learn from others about life. I call your magazines a "life study of the human stages."

I am not so lonely now since I take part in recreational activities and work with kids. I don't have any of my own, but I'll let the Lord be the judge on that.

Barbara J. Means Detroit, Mich.

VOICE FROM THE CELL

Dear Editor:

I have read many accounts of the prison situation, and believe me, the whole story is yet to be told.

Some prisoners can't articulate the problem, and others talk all around it. If you ask me, I say the first thing to do to improve prison life is improve the food. After this is done, let the inmates see their wives in private. After all, the wives didn't commit any crime.

Some inmates deserve another look at their arrests and convictions. Some were framed. Some got too much time for the crime committed. Some didn't get due process.

There is not enough to do. The library situation is a disaster. Food in the commissary is good only for a sweet tooth.

Musicians can't do their thing in jail. Writers and poets can't get to a typewriter, which they should be allowed to have in their cells.

The furlough program should be stepped up, as should the work-release program. Prisoners should be allowed to wear their own clothing.

Emmanuel Cola
No. 376-3435
East Elmhurst, N. Y.

JUSTIFIABLE (?)

Dear Editor:

In the September issue of BRONZE THRILLS you had a small article in the news section about a black mother, in Chicago, shooting the man that reportedly raped her eight-year-old daughter.

The action that she took was justifiable, to be sure, but in the end what good will her action do, other than bring her personal peace of mind?

Justice would have best been served, I personally feel, if she had left his punishment up to the courts. This way, I'm positive, his lawyers will find a loop-hole for the "rat" to crawl out from under, and thus escape getting what he rightly deserves... life in jail.

As history shows us, in other such sad cases, the jury that tries him will feel his getting shot is punishment enough. Either way, I feel sorry for her and her child; mere words can never, in degrading cases like theirs, be enough consolation. And I know, deep in my heart, that if I had been in her place, I would have done the same thing!

A robber was apprehended after he was caught sleeping on the job in Houston, Texas. The only passenger on the bus of John Mitschke, the robber relieved Mitschke of $12 and ordered him to open the cash box. There was no way the cash box could be opened and so the would-be robber took a seat and fell asleep on the bus. The driver then went to a nearby house and called the police. The sleeping robber was still there when police arrived.

In Croyton, Pa., a surprise awaited the thieves of half a case of liquor taken from a state liquor store. The stolen liquor had been rejected and was to be thrown away.

For 62 years, Isaac and Minnie Dirske were joined in holy matrimony and their lives almost ended together after those years. Mrs. Dirske died at the age of 82 and just 12 hours after her demise, Mr. Dirske, 80 succumbed also.

A brutal murder-suicide was the result of an interracial love triangle. Ray Henry, 44, of Chicago, shot and killed his wife, Gloria, and her lover, Gary Moldenhauer, 30, when he found them riding together in a van. Moldenhauer was a psychologist and director of research and program evaluation at the Tinsley Park Mental Health Center where Mrs. Henry was a social worker. Mr. Henry chased the van in which Moldenhauer and his wife were riding to a corner.

He then rammed the van, turning it over on its side. When the couple tried to get out, Henry shot them both in the head and then turned on himself with a gunshot to his chest. All were pronounced dead on arrival at a local hospital.

The Nation of Islam has decided to sell some of its bakeries, restaurants, supermarkets, cleaning stores and other enterprises because these businesses just aren't bringing in the profits. Members of the Nation will get first chance to purchase the businesses as private owners. The two businesses that will definitely remain are the weekly newspaper, the Bilalian News and the fish import business. Attempts are also being made to arrange loans through the Small Business Administration for prospective buyers.

According to author Sam Greenlee who wrote the novel, "The Spook Who Sat Behind the Door," the movie adaption of the novel is doing well after being distributed by a black company. Under the distribution of a major white company, the movie did very poorly, but now things are on the upswing. In the first two weeks the movie played in Louisville and Memphis, it grossed more than $30,000. Greenlee believes that the reason for the sudden success of the movie is that under American Transcontinental Pictures, the black-owned firm, the movie has been placed behind the right theatre doors.

SEX OBJECT FOR NO-GOOD MEN

By CONSTANCE WOODS

While the doorbell continued its nagging persistence, I stretched out the second floor window trying to see who was doing the bell-pushing. An old weathered blue awning prevented my seeing who was there until I saw the retreating back of a tall, lanky man with an exaggerated swagger. I knew that walk. Only Fred Milton could put that much suggestion in the act of walking.

I almost fell out the window hailing him. "Fred! Fred! Where are you going? Come back here!" I was really excited and didn't care who knew it. I hadn't seen Fred for three months. My heart was skipping beats and dancing madly. Observing Fred return toward the door, I moved away from the window.

I was wildly ecstatic as I danced to the buzzer. It was only when I practically tripped over Henry Jackson, that I remembered he was in my apartment. Steady, calm Henry, with whom I had been developing a relationship for several weeks was visibly astonished. Right away, I knew I had made an unfortunate error. Henry was on the verge of changing my terrible opinion of men. It would be folly to lose him.

I waited at the door for Fred, unable to face Henry. My mind was in high gear trying to think of some way out of the calamity. Fred was the type who was here today and gone tomorrow. Before any brilliant thoughts came to my rescue, Fred had me swinging in the air with one hand while caressing my breast with the other. Luckily, Henry was not sitting in a position to notice Fred's antics.

"Fred, come in here and meet my friend," I urged, before matters got completely out of hand. I knew Fred was capable of throwing me over his shoulders and making a bee-line to the bedroom. "Whew!" I breathed to myself. "That was close."

"Hey, baby, what's happening?" Fred gushed to Henry. "How's the boy?" he continued, slapping Henry on the back.

"Henry, this is my cousin, Fred," I lied. I didn't seem to have any choice.

"Pleasure," mumbled Henry, with little conviction. As my cousin, Fred didn't quite make it. Henry's short statement was followed by lame comments concerning the weather. The atmosphere grew tense for Henry and me, while Fred seemed quite at home. Henry suddenly discovered he had an appointment elsewhere and excused himself.

I had this strange sense of loss as he left, but it was toned down considerably when I looked at Fred. However, the realization that Fred was in my apartment for the usual purpose, and the knowledge he would leave and stay away

MEN

Posed by models

Samson grabbed him by the collar. "You touch this lady and you're gonna go to fist city, dig it?"

for a long period dampened my enthusiasm.

When he lunged and pulled me to the baby blue love seat, I was mentally prepared to resist. Swiftly, I pulled out of reach. My lithe body did its own version of a sexy walk to the window. I was resisting and teasing at the same time. "Don't you think Henry is a nice man, a gentleman?" I couldn't resist the jab.

"He's not smart enough for you," Fred shot back. "He's a jive turkey."

"He's okay. We've got a great thing going, Fred. Don't interfere," I warned, more heatedly than I felt. Having gotten the message across, I relaxed. It was important that Fred know he couldn't use me in any way. For as long as I could remember, I had some kind of phobia about men using me. The school of hard knocks had already visited me many times.

The men in my life were only interested in one thing from me - sex

"How does your jive turkey compare with me in the hay?" Fred was asking. I shot a hard glance in his direction, hoping to change the subject.

I felt alive and beautiful when Fred and I went out. I wanted him to ask me out. The first couple of months he knew me, we went to all the parties our friends threw in Los Angeles. In time, he did the usual trick of feigning exhaustion when he came over.

Sexual entanglement

I walked into the kitchen and poured myself a drink to drown out the approaching headache. A few hours later, we were both feeling in rare form. Fred was higher than I was — in fact, he had gotten drunk. I suspected he had been imbibing before he came over. In his weakening state, I tried to get him to take me out. His mind, on the other hand, was also one-tracked. He had turned up the music on my stereo set and had become increasingly emotional.

In record time, he had me trapped on the sofa. I was feeling pretty good, so I was a little slow in realizing my position. When I sufficiently cleared my head, we were 90 per cent on the way toward sexual entanglement. I knew if I didn't stop him immediately, I would reach the point of no return. I managed to get up and suggested firmly he take his leave.

Fred got up as if to leave. I watched with mixed feelings his lean, wiry, animalistic body wiggle up from the couch. Without warning, he reached those long arms down and lifted me up into his arms. I felt even higher than I was, up in his arms.

Slowly, as if sure of his power over me, he moved into the bedroom. I had a red fluffy blanket casually, but neatly thrown over a queen-sized bed. I remember vaguely wishing we were married and that I had time to throw on my pink negligee. I was romantic by nature while men were sometimes so crude.

We fell on the bed together and for a moment I was jarred out of my reverie. "No, Fred — no," I whispered, uncertainly, pushing on his chest. His mouth started working soothing miracles around my neck while his hands sought out all those responsive points on my body he knew so well.

My medium-sized breasts were deftly manipulated. He played my body like a violin. I had let matters get too far advanced to stop him, and besides I was kind of under the influence of brandy. At the moment when all seemed lost, I got this flash of Henry.

I wondered how I was going to face Henry after lying to him about Fred. My phobia about being used also reared its head. I started screaming. "Get up and let me go! No man is going to use me this way."

I pushed and fought hard for awhile. The stereo set was playing too loudly for me to be heard by the neighbors. It soon became evident that though I was under control, Fred was not.

He had neither phobia nor compunctions to slow him down. Finally, in disgust, I lay there and let him have his way. I concentrated on not enjoying. I lay there like a paper sack and showed neither pleasure nor motion while he huffed and puffed, trying to blow my house in.

Afterward, I paced the floor while Fred lay on the bed snoring. I became increasingly angered by his attitude. Not only does he take what he wants, but then he goes off to sleep. I had to be protected.

I needed a man for three reasons. Protection against other men taking advantage of me was one such reason. Another was for love and all it implied. The third reason for my need of a man was to show off.

I wanted people to take notice when my man and I walked into a party, or when we walked down the street. At that moment, I felt unprotected. I hated my body for the way in which it had been used.

Calling Henry was out of the question after the deception I had used on him. Still, I was determined Fred not get away with using me in the manner in which he had. I was not yet out of the influence of the brandy.

I searched his wallet seeking some means of hurting him. After removing two credit cards and a checkbook, I replaced the wallet in his jacket pocket. That night I was able to sleep a little more soundly in spite of Fred's snoring. I had hit upon a course of action that would both make him pay and drive him back to me sooner than he expected.

Morning found me alone in bed. I called in sick and dressed resolutely for my planned activities. I went about the day in a trance-like stupor. By evening, I felt smug and satisfied, though somewhat guilty. By the time the phone woke me from a nap, I was a victim of a bad dream. Thus I woke up having second thoughts about my activities that day.

It was Henry on the phone. A little thing like that could pick up my spirits. It did. I was afraid Henry wouldn't want to speak to me again. "Hi, Henry, how was your day?" I beamed into the phone. "Did anybody miss my presence down there?"

"Of course, I missed you," he answered. "Why didn't you show up? How is your cousin, by the way? Did he stay around to help you get through the day?"

"Henry, what are you accusing me of?" I exploded.

Something didn't jell

"I'm sorry, Connie," Henry said contritely. "It's just that I felt jealous yesterday when you got so excited over your cousin. Something didn't seem to jell. Now how do you feel? Do you feel up to going out tonight?"

I wiped at the moisture forming at my eyes. Henry always made me feel so comfortable. "Henry, please come over this evening. I don't want to go out; I want to discuss some bad news with you. Something terrible happened last night, but I'm all right."

After the excitement of the previous evening, I was really looking forward to the calm assurance of Henry. Calmness reminded me of Evelyn, my best friend. Evelyn worked in a beauty parlor and was to open her own parlor soon.

Most of the clients who came to the salon where she worked came because of Evelyn. She wasn't as lively and exciting as some of my friends, but she was more ambitious and a tremendous friend. Like Henry, she gave me a sense of having my feet on the ground.

Evelyn and I lived in the same building, so I spent little time getting to her place after I called her. "Evelyn, I think I am in trouble," I plunged right in with my usual directness.

I told her of the incident with Fred and Henry and went on to tell her of Fred's actions. Nervously, I continued, "Today I cashed one of his checks that I wrote for $50. I had to let him know he couldn't get away with what he did to me."

Evelyn looked at me in her understanding way, but I could tell she thought I had done a stupid thing. She went into the kitchen and brought back two cups of coffee. Calmly she quizzed, "Why did you take his credit cards? Do you actually want him to come back?"

A fool to lose him

"Evelyn, Fred happens to be the only guy I really love."

"Connie, he lives with a woman. Do you mean you are still in love with him?" my friend asked.

"I don't think so. I mean, how could I be in love with him? I was just hoping to straighten him out. Sure, I would like to have him return to me, but not like he is now."

She took another sip on her cup of coffee. "I think you will be a fool if you lose Henry. From what you tell me, he's what I call an ambitious and decent man. You do love him, don't you?"

I puzzled over her question awhile before answering. "I really don't know. I know only that I miss him when he's not around and that I really feel at peace when he's near me. I don't feel any need to perform for his benefit. The problem with Henry as I see it is that he hasn't proposed and he doesn't treat me to enough gifts and parties."

Evelyn frowned. "But he takes you out occasionally; besides, you already told me he is saving his money to go into business. How can he be extravagant and have anything at the same time?"

"Well," I mused, "I have learned the hard way that if you don't give in sexually to these men, they leave. If you do give in they tend to come back for more. I demand either a marriage proposal or to be showered with gifts so I don't get this headache from being used."

We continued talking in this manner until it became necessary for me to go up and prepare for Henry. Evelyn gave me a parting warning at the door. "I think you are being naive. You expect too much from Henry too soon. Personally, I am convinced you need a man like Henry to

MAKE ANYONE DO WHATEVER YOU WANT WITH THE YOU MENTALLY COMMAND WITH YOUR MIND ALONE!

I would be skeptical if I read an ad like this. But I'd also be highly interested, as you are now.

With good reason! The very thought of possessing the ability to command, control and dominate others is probably your secret wish. One command you sincerely believe could never come true.

Well, think again! Your secret wish is about to be granted in full, unmistakable measure. A few short days from now, you are going to demonstrate that fact to yourself right in your own living room.

On that fateful, momentous occasion, you are going to mentally project a thought command to someone you know. Not one word will be uttered by you.

YET THAT PERSON IS GOING TO FOLLOW YOUR SILENT COMMAND TO THE LETTER... WITHOUT EVEN KNOWING OR SUSPECTING THAT YOU GAVE THE ORDER!

And only you will know why he or she is acting in that manner! Your next test is going to be even more unbelievable! This time you'll command not just a single individual but a group of four or five people. This time, you'll mentally project a thought command to all of this group!

AGAIN, WONDERFULLY, THAT ENTIRE GROUP IS GOING TO PERFORM YOUR SILENT COMMAND EXACTLY AS YOU WILLED IT!

Again, they will have absolutely no idea whatsoever that their actions—seemingly voluntary—came directly from you! Why should they? You said nothing. Made no gesture! Not indicated your wishes in any way—except mentally!

Yet, you're going to top even these astounding results! In the weeks and months, thereafter, and throughout the rest of your life, you are going to intensify your secret ability to command, control, and dominate others in ways that may bring you thousands of dollars extra—the love of someone you desire the status and position you've thought unattainable—until today!

If you are telling, the toughest prospect will be putty in your hands. The urge to sign a sales contract with the terms dictated by you—will be irresistible.

In business situations, your ideas are the ones which will be heartily and enthusiastically approved by the "top brass"—just as if you were the boss' hat!

In your private life, you will capture the adoration and affection of anyone you fancy—even at first sight!

At social gatherings, you will be the one regarded as the leader—the person who makes decisions that must be unquestionably obeyed... at once!

Yes, wherever you go, whatever you do, everyone you meet will come under your silent control. Do with them as you will!

Does all this sound impossible? Not only hard to believe—but hard to achieve?

Then get set for the surprise of your life!

YOU WILL BELIEVE IT... AND YOU WILL ACHIEVE IT!

Stop and think for a moment. Skeptics were once convinced that the earth was flat. They were dead certain that the new-fangled automobile would never, ever replace the horse and buggy. Man reach the Moon? Impossible!

You and I know differently. The "never happens" of yesterday are today's realities today. So if you are still a skeptic, I'm more than willing to give you the opportunity to make a liar out of me. To prove that everything I've told you so far could never happen!

Along with the opportunity to prove me wrong, I'll also give you the "risk-free" chance to prove I'm right... along with a free gift for you to keep. Here's my proposal.

My company has just released a strange new manual dealing with a subject that has fascinated the human race since the beginning of time. That subject is parapsychology. It deals with the ability of the mind to project thought and communicate with others, outside the body, using none of the five senses!

The manual takes this exciting subject and develops it into a new technique to help you command, control, and dominate people with your mind alone.

Actually, you do not need the manual to do this. You have already done so many times without ever realizing it, through your own unconscious native-born ability. The manual will help you to understand the technique so that you can perform it consciously, on demand, to achieve your goals and wishes.

We call this technique SUCCESSP—the science of extra-sensory persuasion. This is not the regular ESP you've heard about. This is Extra-Sensory Persuasion. Properly used, it permits you thoughts to influence one person or many.

Originally, this manual was to be the basis of a personally-conducted

FUN FOODS

Basic Mayonnaise Salad Gel offers a quick study in Economics. The dish takes beautifully to economy foods such as tuna or cooked meat left over in your refrigerator. Knox Unflavored Gelatine is the best friend a leftover ever had when it comes to stretching that rood to feed several people well. That's just the kind of kitchen economics that interests most homemakers today.

The recipe offers versatility plus: one basic dish that may be varied in many winning ways. It can turn up as a chopped ham, chicken, hard-cooked egg or seafood salad. Or it can combine chicken and celery; eggs, celery, and green pepper; shrimp, celery and diced pimiento. Mix and match for the kind of dish that offers fine taste and natural nutrition, and little strain to the budget.

— Gel dishes require cooking only until the gelatine is dissolved. This has happened when there are no visible granules, when the gel "disappears." Hold saucapan in well-lighted area and tilt to see if granules are clinging to pan or spatula.

— Time needed to chill until "set" or "firm" depends on the size of the container. Gel dishes are usually ready to serve in just two to three hours.

After chilling, dip container into warm (not hot) water to the depth of the gel for about five seconds. Carefully loosen the gel from side of the container with the tip of a sharp knife; tilt or shake container gently to loosen gel. Invert serving dish to top on container. Hold both firmly together and turn over (right side up). Shake gently until gel slips out of container and onto serving dish. If gel does not come loose, repeat.

MAYONNAISE SALAD GEL

1 envelope unflavored gelatine
3/4 cup cold water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1/8 teaspoon Tabasco pepper sauce
1 1/4 cups mayonnaise
1 teaspoon dry mustard
1/2 teaspoon salt*
2 tablespoons minced onion
Salad ingredients **

Sprinkle gelatine over cold water in small saucepan. Place over low heat; stir constantly until gelatine dissolves (until there are no visible granules), about three minutes. Remove from heat. Cool slightly. In mixing bowl, gradually blend dissolved gelatine, lemon juice, Worcestershire sauce and Tabasco into mayonnaise. If necessary, beat with rotary beater or wire whisk until smooth. Add dry mustard, salt and onion; mix well.

Chill, stirring occasionally, until mixture thickens slightly. Stir in prepared salad ingredients. Turn into three- or four-cup mold or bowl. Chill until set. Makes four servings.

* With ham or tuna, decrease salt to

1/4 teaspoon; with eggs, increase to 3/4 teaspoon.

Salad ingredients: 1½ cups chopped, ham, chicken, hard-cooked eggs or seafood. Plus ¾ cup chopped celery, or ½ cup chopped celery and ¼ cup chopped green pepper. Plus ¼ cup diced pimiento, optional.

Mayonnaise Gels-

I Was... A PAWN IN THE DEVIL'S CHESS GAME

Slowly she began to mumble a chant as she ran her fingers over the handkerchief. She was trying to contact the spirits.

Posed by models

By CHRISTY NELSON

Joel's desperate voice gave me a sense of satisfaction as he gripped me tightly by the arm. "Look, I've got to talk to you about this, Christy. I've got to!"

"What's there to talk about?" I replied coldly. Maliciously I wanted to drain every bit of pleasure I could from Joel's anxiety. I had a good idea what he wanted to talk about, but I didn't want to give him the satisfaction of letting him know.

"Come on, Christy!" Joel moaned in a low voice. He looked around the cafe suspiciously, checking to see if anyone who knew him was in the place. It irritated me that he didn't want to be seen in public with me.

Whenever he managed to corner me in a dark, out-of-the-way place he would practically rape me with his pawing hands. Not that I wanted to stop him. I could have if I wanted to, but I didn't.

"This is driving me nuts! The world is really crummy if you don't marry the person you really love. She's driving me nuts, Christy. I swear she is!" Joel gave me a frightened glance.

"Why did you marry her in the first place, then?" I wanted to ask him, but we had been through that too many times before so I buried my question and my

I had a witch cast a spell on Joel's wife so I could have him, but satan himself took charge of the whole thing anger. "I feel so sorry for you," I said sincerely and took Joel's hand, not caring if anyone saw us or not.

"Surely there's something we can do."

"I hope so, Christy. If she hadn't gone and gotten pregnant ... she's really making my life miserable," Joel added suddenly, trying to pull my attention away from what he had let slip out.

"It usually takes two to get one pregnant," I said harshly and withdrew my hand from Joel's.

He sighed and gave me a mournful look. "How many times have I said I'm sorry? It was all a mistake, Christy. An awful mistake. And now there doesn't seem to be anything to do about it." Joel slipped his hand back in mine, and gave the cafe another quick once-over.

Ugly rumors

This hiding shamed both of us, yet I understood Joel's worries. I didn't know whether I could face the ugly rumors that would circulate around the town if the two of us were caught together, holding hands. "Well . . ." Joel groaned and began to slide out of the booth we were sitting in.

"Don't go yet!" I pleaded. I realized with a sinking feeling that if Joel and I continued our masquerade we would be found out sooner or later, but I couldn't bear the sight of seeing him leave.

"I've got to. I shouldn't have taken a chance like . . ." Joel didn't need to finish his sentence. "I'll try to get hold of you later." Then his mouth formed the words "I love you," but they remained silent on his lips.

"I love you, too, Joel," I whispered to myself as I watched him walk out of the restaurant. I stared down into my cold cup of coffee and half eaten piece of cherry pie. I didn't have the stomach to eat any more of it. Every meeting I had with Joel, those secretive love-filled rendezvous, left me with a heavy sense of guilt, and strangely, a nibbling doubt.

Joel had been married only six months now and already I was destroying his and Jane's marriage. She was almost due to have my lover's baby. Was it right? Was what I was doing right?

I hoped our love justified what we were doing to Jane, yet at the same time I felt sorry for myself. I guess my sorrow transformed itself into anger because I found myself becoming mad at the woman who had taken Joel away from me. Had she been right when she stole my man from me? I didn't think so.

But I hadn't remained depressed and fretful for long. "It's working," I told myself with glee. "Madame Ruby's known as a wonder worker, but this is developing even better than she expected."

Next spell

I glanced at the clock hanging from the cafe wall. It was a little after 3:00 and my appointment with Madame Ruby wasn't until 3:30, but I didn't think she'd mind me dropping by a little early.

I wanted to give her the good news and get started on the next spell she was going to work for me against Jane Cory. As Joel had said moments ago, "There must be some way!" And I was sure I had found it.

"The most promising couple at Cal High," was the way the school annual had described Joel and me. We were such a special couple we even had our picture printed together, sitting on the senior bench in front of the school. And it was true, or at least Joel and I thought so.

Ever since I had first seen Joel smile his special intimate smile at me and felt the touch of his skin against mine, it seemed as though we were destined to be together and happy forever.

We used to lie under the huge oak tree in my parents' back yard and dream about the future. Joel was going to become a history teacher and I was going to become the mother of his five children.

We had even picked out the names for them -- Bess, John, Carol, Mark and Steven. We knew there would be two girls and three boys -- we just knew it. Underneath the leafy boughs of the tree on a warm, spring day Joel had asked me to marry him. It was kind of ridiculous in a way. We were only juniors in high school, but it didn't seem funny to me at the time.

Filled with bitterness

Both of us knew marriage would be a long way off. According to our plans, Joel had to finish college first. In the meantime, I would get a job and begin saving for our house and children.

Those days were a beautiful time, knowing as I did I was going to marry the man I loved and have his children. They filled me with bitterness when I thought of them now. Where had it gone wrong? What had we done to upset our dreams so tragically?

"It doesn't do any good rehashing the past. It's over and done with. You've tried to forget and can't. But now you've found a way to change all that has taken place. You can make Joel yours again."

I thought to myself as I walked toward Madame Ruby's house. I had parked my car in the lot she had behind her house.

As she had explained, there were a lot of people from Riverburg who consulted her but didn't want to make it known. And she had wisely provided everything she could to insure visits to her would go undetected.

Weird house

I couldn't help but shudder lightly as I opened the door and walked into Madame Ruby's waiting room. Ever since I could remember I had been warned to stay away from the weird house and the weird woman who practiced fortune telling inside it.

I had never seen Madame Ruby before I made my first appointment with her over a month ago, but the appearance of her house, a small rundown dirty white building, still gave me a shudder of fear.

Inside, I brushed away the silk curtains I had grown to be familiar with and the scent of incense drifted to me from Madame Ruby's reading room.

"Ah, Christine! Come early, eh? How very good . . . I feel the spirits moving especially strong this afternoon and we have much work to be done, eh?"

I didn't have to wait long before Madame Ruby rushed out of her reading room to greet me. She was of average size, her hair tucked into a bandana, and she spoke in a broken French accent which at first made it hard to understand her.

Madame Ruby's face was all smiles when she met me. Usually it was twisted into a deep frown. "Have you been to him recently?" she asked as she guided me into the reading room.

"This afternoon," I replied. "In fact, I just left him." Inside the room the smell and smoke of the incense was much

FORCED INTO SEX WITH MY MOTHER'S PIMP

By NADINE HARRIS

sigh of relief threw myself on the bed my mother and I shared. The bed began to squeak.

I was reminded of the hundreds of filthy men who had been there. The tears really came down then, and I cried my heart out.

Almost every day kids followed me from school and taunted me. They asked mean things.

"Have you turned out yet?" "When you gonna start selling that stuff, girl?" "How much does your Mama charge?" And the only thing I could do to stop them was to run like hell.

I was supposed to graduate from high school in a month, but I couldn't go through one more day of the same kind of hell.

The only relief I ever had came when Clarence walked me home.

Clarence was 6 ft. 2 and awfully imposing. People didn't say anything to me when Clarence walked with me, but I didn't like for Clarence to walk me home. I just wanted to be alone. Sometimes it seemed I hated all men. I didn't like Clarence to hear the taunts.

A sudden knock on the door brought me rushing into the front room in panic. Mama wasn't home. It could only be one of her men tricks. I decided not to answer the door. I heard a key turning in the lock. Breathlessly I waited, while Ace Charles, my mother's pimp, walked in grinning from ear to ear.

They forced me into my room. I knew they planned to rape me

They gagged me. I knew what they intended to do and I struggled with all my strength.

It was Clarence on the phone. "Why don't you let me come up for a minute, Nadine?" he asked. "I don't want to take your virginity. I just want to come and be friends and, you know, talk. Just because you're the last virgin left in Harlem, you don't have to be so stuffy."

"Clarence, how many times do I have to tell you? Mama could be up there with some man, some trick, in the bedroom. Isn't it enough that half the school teases me and talks about me behind my back? Must you also come up and see what's happening in this hell I call home?"

I simply couldn't talk any longer. I felt scalding tears bursting loose.

I ran to my apartment and slammed the door shut. I stood panting like a dog, tears streaming down my face. "Please God," I thought, "don't let Mama be here." I wanted to be alone.

I tiptoed to the bedroom door, cautiously peered inside, and with a

"Ace, where did you get a key to my house?" I nearly screamed.

"I got it from your mother," Ace said confidently. "She tells me your hymen is still intact. I'm the teacher of teachers, and I'm here to school you in nature's first art. Since you gotta learn sometime, honey, you might as well get your education from a pro. All you need is for the wrong person to thread the first needle, and you'll never properly enjoy the exquisite loveliness of nature's finest diversion."

Keep it a secret

"Don't you touch me!" I screamed.
"Did Mama tell you to mess with me?"

"No," he said. "This is just between you and me. We'll keep this a secret from your mother."

I tried to make a dash past Ace when he grabbed me. I started to scream, but his sweaty hand wrapped around my mouth. I started kicking. With his free hand he opened the door and two of his friends came in. They had been waiting outside. I knew exactly what their intentions were and I began struggling with all my strength.

The three of them grabbed me, gagged my mouth and maneuvered me into the bedroom. Then they tied me to the bed.
My arms were tied to the front post and my feet were roped to the end posts. I had never been so terrified in all my life!

They ripped my clothing from my body and began fondling my body all over. One of the dudes started jamming his finger into my private area, when Ace pulled him back and ordered the two men out.

Ace then stood leering down at me while my eyes were threatening to pop out. Frantically, I was trying to break free of my bonds. In full view, Ace slowly took his clothes off. He then finished ripping off my clothing. I lay there nude, jerking, sweating and frightened.

Never in my life did I wish so much to see my mother. I knew she was my only hope. I hated more now more than ever.
Suddenly, he was kissing and caressing my body all over, trying to kindle a flame. Every touch made me hate him all the more. Tears began to burn my face.

Uncaring, he mounted me. I jerked as a spasm of pain washed over me. Tears flowed freely now. For what seemed an eternity, the pain went on and on and on.

I learned later that if I had relaxed my body, the pain would have been considerably less acute. At the time, however, my mind and body froze. When I thought I could no longer endure the agony or the ugliness of his face, he flooded me and collapsed on my skinny frame. Ace then tried kissing me, and with a surge of pure violent hatred, I bit his bottom lip.

Screaming in pain, Ace backed away and pulled a switchblade knife from his pants that lay nearby. He advanced on me, blade flashing, with a menacing look.

"Oh, God!" I said. "This is it." At that moment I knew my throat had had it.

I felt the knife slash at my rope. First one, and then all my limbs were free. Ace stood over me waving the knife threateningly. "This is for biting me," he fumed, viciously slapping my face.

I fell backward, reeling from the force of the husky man. "You talk about our little affair, and I'll come back and rip your heart out," he threatened.
Without another word, he left me alone, nude and badly shaken.

Naturally I was afraid and miserable, but mostly I was furious. Determined to get even, I phoned Clarence and left a message with his mother. I then called my grandmother, Mama Carrie. She lived only two blocks away and still had plenty of fire in her. Unlike her daughter, my mother, she was a God-fearing, hard-working woman.

I stumbled to the bathroom mirror.
My face was tear-streaked. I looked awful. I continued to stare into the mirror a long time. My mind was a blank.
Eventually, my mother stood behind me with her mouth wide open in a horror-stricken look.

"Nadine, what the hell have you been doing? You're too young to be bringing boys up here," Mama yelled.

"Mama, I . . ." I started.

"Girl, don't you be lying to me. You think I'm a fool? I can see what you've been doing. Your clothes are scattered every which way, my bed is all bloody.
You tell me what happened - and don't you lie to me!"

"Mama, I . . . please, Mama, please listen to me! Ace raped me," I blurted.
Unchecked, the tears began to flow. I looked Mama right in the eye. Her eyes

My home became a torture chamber

By SHARON NICHOLS

It was on my 16th birthday that Dad brought home a strange woman, introduced us to each other and told me she was moving in with us. They'd been married earlier in the day and she was now my stepmother.

I had this feeling Dad must have picked her up at some bar, because she looked the type, the same type of woman he'd brought home on a few other occasions after he'd been guzzling booze at one of the local bars.

Only this one wasn't even good looking. She was a big woman, almost as tall as Dad, with a plain, coarse face that all the makeup she'd piled on couldn't change.

I sure couldn't figure out what Dad saw in her that had made him want to marry her. But that was his business, of course, not mine.

"Why don't you fix us some lunch, Sharon?" Dad said. "While you're doing it, Doris and I can unload the car and bring her things into the house."

"Yeah, now that you mention it, I'm starved," Doris spoke up. "We haven't had too much time to think about eating today, have we, Harvey?"

I don't think either of them paid any attention to what the food tasted like, though, after I made lunch. They could hardly keep their hands off each other the whole time they were eating.

When we were through with our meal, Doris made no offer to help me clear off the table. She and Dad went straight to the bedroom and that's where they stayed the next three or four hours.

Dad was a merchant seaman, and just a few days before he'd been paid off by the steamship company so he had plenty of money to spend right then. He and Doris were making the most of it during those next weeks. They had their dinner at some restaurant every night and then they'd make the rounds, hitting every club in town.

Lovemaking sounds

They used the daytime mostly to catch up on their sleep. More often than not, when I came home from school they were still in the bedroom, only they weren't always sleeping.

Once or twice their door was opened a little and I could hear the sounds of their lovemaking as plain as anything. It really disgusted me because I felt the least they could do was keep their bedroom door shut.

But neither of them seemed to care what I thought. They were so wrapped up in each other it was as if I weren't even around.

Sometimes Dad came out of the bedroom, unshaven and rumpled-looking in his old, flannel robe, and acted surprised to find I was there.

"Wh-what are you doing home, Sharon?" he'd ask. "Didn't you go to school today?"

When I'd tell him the time, he always had to check the clock hanging on the kitchen wall because he could never believe it was as late as I said it was. Then Doris would be there, giving a soft, little laugh as she caught hold of his arm.

"What time did you think it was, Harvey?" she'd ask. "The hours have simply slipped by while we were . . . well, you know, enjoying our bed."

Sometimes Doris made a half-hearted effort to cook a meal, but as a general rule, if there was any work to be done it was up to me to do it.

She was a lazy, self-indulgent person whose only interest was getting as much pleasure out of life as she could.

Dad was just as bad as she was. He'd never been a really great father, but now it seemed we didn't have any kind of relationship at all. Suddenly he'd become someone I didn't know any more — and I felt more alone than I ever had in my life.

Often I couldn't help thinking about my mother who'd been gone only eight months, wishing I could tell her how much better I understood a lot of things now. She'd tried the best she could to give me a normal upbringing — to pretend things were as they should be in our home.

Only I'd heard her crying sometimes late at night when she was in her room alone. I knew Dad and she didn't have a happy marriage, and that it was because Dad was always drinking and chasing around with other women. But it was something Mother and I never talked about.

It was Miss Mathis, my English teacher, who gave me the message on a Wednesday afternoon that my mother was in the hospital and that I was to go there right away. I didn't know then, of course, that anything was seriously wrong with her, but still it was a shock. I just stood there staring at Miss Mathis.

Her eyes were kind as she touched me gently on the arm. "Do you want me to send someone with you, Sharon?" she asked. "I mean, if you'd rather not go alone."

I shook my head. "No, I'll be all right," I said. "It can't be anything too bad, or they'd have said so when they called."

Mother was dead by the time I reached the hospital. A neighbor had found her lying in the yard where she'd been weeding her flower beds. An ambulance was called right away, but there wasn't anything the doctors could do for her after she was brought to the hospital. She died of a massive cerebral hemorrhage.

The officials at the hospital wanted to know where they could find my father, but I was too ashamed to tell them where he probably was, that they might be able to find him if they wanted to start calling some of the taverns in town. So I just shook my head and said I didn't know where he was.

I could tell when Dad came home several hours later he'd been drinking heavily. There were the bleary, bloodshot eyes and flushed face a drunken man always has. But it was amazing how much he sobered up as soon as I told him of Mom's death.

"My God!" he muttered. "It can't be true."

"Oh, Daddy." I burst into tears and threw myself into his arms. "I miss her so much already. What are we going to do?"

Wordlessly, his arms tightened around me and he held me that way a long time. He was crying the same as I was.

My father and I were closer in that moment than we'd ever been before. It even lasted several weeks — while my hopes rose that Dad might be changing, that he might even stop drinking. But I guess I should have known it was too good to be true.

By late August he'd signed up to ship out again and I could tell how anxious he was to get away. There was this old woman, Mrs. Ames, who was supposed to live there in the house and look after me while he was gone, only it was worse having her there than if I'd been all by myself.

Cheap-looking floozy

She spent most of her time dozing in the rocking chair in the living room and could never seem to remember when it was time to cook a meal. It seemed to me I was the one looking after her instead of the other way around. I even had to remind her when it was time to go to bed.

I can't say I regretted it when Dad returned three months later, that Mrs. Ames disappeared from the house. She certainly hadn't been any company, not that I had any better company afterward.

Dad was hardly ever at home and when he did come home he'd bring a bottle with him and a cheap-looking floozy he'd picked up somewhere. Between the two of them he had everything he wanted to make him happy.

It wouldn't, have been so bad if I'd enjoyed school the way some kids do, but there was nothing about school I liked. I didn't make friends easily and so I never participated in any of the activities that went on.

A lot of new people had moved to Greenville because of the big chemical plant that had been built in the west end of town and the student enrollment that year was larger than it had ever been.

Most of the teachers felt harassed and put upon because of all the extra work they had to do.

It was only Miss Mathis who was

SISTER CHARLOTTE GOD SENT GOD'S MESSENGER

Who guarantees to heal the sick and the ailing, to remove all suffering and bad luck. What your eyes see your heart must believe. She will show you the sickness you have in your stomach and how to get rid of it. She also guarantees to restore your lost nature. Through her prayers the crippled have walked and the blind have seen the light. Sister Charlotte (504) 652-2669. SEND SELF-ADDRESSED ENVELOPES Rt. 1, Box 774, La Place, Louisiana 70068. Just ten minutes from New Orleans.

different from the rest of them. She was always nice and friendly to everyone and tried to make her English class interesting. But I didn't really get too much out of any of the classes I attended. The only thing I was looking forward to was the day I'd be grown up and could have a different life than the one I had now.

That's the way I felt before I met Travis O'Conner one warm, sunny afternoon in the little park across the street from school. I often went there to eat my lunch like a lot of the other students because it was fun to sit there, to watch the pigeons strutting around beneath the trees.

Special friend

There was one brown-and-white bird with a very aristocratic air about him I'd privately named King Albert. He'd become my special friend. Every day he'd come straight over to me and wait for a handout, his small, bright eyes staring at my hands intently as I broke off a crust of bread to give to him.

I'd just given King Albert what was left of my bologna sandwich when a tall boy came strolling over to the bench where I was sitting.

"Hey, it looks like you're giving more of your lunch to that pigeon than you're eating yourself," he grinned. "Or do you bring two lunches with you — one for him and one for yourself?"

He slid onto the bench where I was sitting. "I hope you don't mind, but I've been watching you feed that same pigeon all week. It seems he knows a true friend when he finds one."

I was overcome by a wave of self-consciousness as I raised my head to look into his steady eyes because no boy had ever paid any attention to me before. They liked girls who could laugh and joke and make it fun to be with them.

Somehow the knowledge that this one had been silently observing me for a week gave me a funny feeling in the pit of my stomach.

"What's your name?" he asked softly. I managed to smile a little, "Sharon Nichols."

He told me his name was Travis O'Conner, and that he'd just moved to Greenville with his family less than a month ago. His father and older brother were both lab technicians, but what Travis wanted to be was an architect.

I found I really enjoyed listening to him talk while he told me about himself and his background, so much so that by the time we returned to school all the self-consciousness I'd felt at first simply evaporated into thin air. Suddenly he turned toward me, taking my hand in his.

"Are you busy or anything this weekend, Sharon?" he asked. "If you're not, I'd like to take you to a movie Saturday night."

My heart skipped a beat as I felt his hand tighten on mine a little. He seemed really anxious to find out what my answer would be.

"I'd like that," I said.

It was funny how I'd never paid much attention to the old, Georgian house that was next door to ours because it was the first thing Travis noticed that evening as we were starting out for the movies.

"Oh, man, that place must have been a real mansion in its day," he remarked. "Look at that fanlight above the door and all that beautiful scrollwork decorating the front porch. I'll bet the architect who designed that house really enjoyed his work."

"It's been empty for years," I said. "If you want to take a look around, I don't think there's anyone who would mind."

"Yeah, that would be interesting," he nodded. "But I guess maybe we'd better go to the movies now and we can do that later."

So that's what we did. And I have to admit that exploring that old house, which I'd never considered anything special, was the best part of the whole evening. It was Travis, using the flashlight I brought from home, who discovered the unlocked basement door so we could get into the inside of the house. It was dank and musty-smelling from having been closed up so long, but by the time we reached the living quarters of the house the odor didn't seem quite so offensive.

I'd never seen anything like those broad, sweeping arches that led from one big room with a high ceiling to another. What was even more surprising was there was a lot of old-fashioned furniture that had never been moved out of the house.

An hour later, after we'd poked around everywhere, even climbing some steep stairs up into the attic, we sat down seemed to be in bed with a sick headache. But I'd have bitten off my tongue rather than get her riled up again like she'd just been. The best I could do was keep my mouth shut and try to stay out of her way as much as possible.

Anyway, I found happiness when I was with Travis. We'd both come to realize the way we felt about each other was going to endure the rest of our lives. Yes, we knew we'd get married some day — only it was such a long way off.

It was something that grew stronger as time went on — until one night when we were alone in the old house we found the same happiness thousands of other lovers have known.

There was a little pain at first, but I hardly noticed it because I was so thrilled by what was happening. There was nothing else right then except us — Travis and me — in a heavenly world of our own.

"Oh, Travis," I breathed when it was over. "We'll never stop loving each other, will we?"

"No, never," he whispered. "I'll always love you, Sharon — for the rest of my life."

It was just as wonderful every time we made love after that, always bringing us a sweetness and joy nothing else in the world could equal.

Then one day in October Travis told me he wouldn't be able to see me the next week-end. He was going hunting with his dad and brother.

"I've never been hunting and I'm really not all that crazy about the idea," he sighed. "But they go deer hunting every year and they've been after me quite a while to go with them. So I'm doing it to please them more than anything else."

Even though Travis promised to call me Sunday night as soon as he got back, I knew it was going to be a long, lonely weekend for me, and it was even worse than I thought it would be. I was so bored and restless, just knowing I couldn't see Travis, I hardly knew what to do with myself.

What made it worse was that Travis didn't call Sunday night as he promised. Moreover, it wasn't until I returned to school the next day I learned why I hadn't heard from him — Travis had been killed during the first hunting trip he'd ever been on.

It had happened early Sunday afternoon. He'd been accidentally shot by a hunter who was tracking a deer into some dense underbrush deep in the forest.

I hadn't seen the news bulletin that was flashed on TV several times the previous evening, but of course a lot of the teachers and students had. The whole school was buzzing with talk about the tragic thing that had happened to Travis.

Deep state of shock

I don't know why I stayed in school that day. I went from one class to another like an automaton, unaware of anything going on around me. The deep state of shock I was in had turned me numb.

Somehow, at the end of the day I found myself sitting in the little park across the street from the school. It was where I'd first met Travis and it seemed even now I could see the dim outline of his tall, lean body as he'd stood before me that day.

Sitting there in the stillness of the afternoon, I was sure I could hear the sound of his voice borne on the little gusts of wind that swept toward me.

"I'll always love you, Sharon — for the rest of my life," he had said.

Slowly the image faded and I was sitting there again on that park bench all alone. I knew that never again would I hear the sound of Travis' voice or feel the touch of his hand. My darling Travis had gone away from me forever.

As I glanced around, I saw it was a dreary autumn day with a carpet of dead leaves covering the ground. The bare trees were ugly now, lifting their skeletal limbs toward the sky as if begging God that they, too, might die as the leaves were doing that they'd cast off.

"You're going to catch cold sitting here like this, Sharon," a voice said softly. "It's starting to rain in case you haven't noticed."

I turned my head to find Miss Mathis standing there, the wind whipping the collar of her corduroy jacket against her face.

"I don't care," I mumbled. "It doesn't matter."

"I know what you're going through, honey." She put a gentle hand on my shoulder. "I lost someone who was very close to me once, too. Someone I'd be married to today if he hadn't been killed in an airplane crash. It happened a year ago, but I've found time heals the hurt a little. It'll be the same for you, too, Sharon, believe me."

An hour later I found myself sitting in Miss Mathis' pretty blue and white kitchen. She was encouraging me to talk about the sorrow that was burdening my heart. She said it would make me feel better and it did -- a little.

Blinded by tears

But later, as I walked slowly homeward, I felt the pain rising inside me again. I was suddenly blinded by the tears that flooded my eyes.

I buried myself in my schoolwork during those next weeks, trying to push everything else out of my thoughts. It helped that at night I could go right to sleep as soon as my head touched the pillow. I was too exhausted to do anything else.

I don't know when I began to realize the tiredness I was feeling all the time was related to something else besides my school work. Once or twice while I was eating breakfast I'd been a little nauseous, but since I was going through such a bad time right then I attributed it to that. But eventually I had to come face to face with the knowledge I was pregnant.

At first I was panicky, wondering what I was going to do, but within a few days my feelings changed altogether. Travis was gone, but he'd left me a part of himself I could continue to love the rest of my life. I knew I'd manage to keep my baby somehow. I had to!

I was able to keep my secret to myself two more months but, of course, the loose-fitting overblouses I'd been wearing to school and around the house couldn't hide my condition forever.

One evening as I was standing at the kitchen sink washing dishes, I was conscious of Doris staring at me fixedly. Suddenly she reached out and spun me around.

"Sharon, are you pregnant?" she asked bluntly. "It certainly looks to me as if you are."

A little needle of fear went through me as I pulled loose, backing away from her. But Doris continued staring at me, her eyes narrowed.

"Harvey, will you come in here?" she called.

"My father came into the kitchen carrying his newspaper and looking puzzled. "What is it, Doris?"

"It seems your sweet, little daughter has got herself pregnant." Doris gave a short, unpleasant laugh. "Hasn't anyone ever explained the facts of life to her, Harvey? Maybe she doesn't know about the Pill."

My dad took a moment to look me over. "Who's the boy?"

"He's dead," I said.

"Don't lie to me!" He grabbed my arm. "I'll find out who it is, so you might as well tell me right now."

"I'm not lying!" I cried out. "There was an accident. He was killed four months ago while hunting in the woods."

Doris' lips tightened. "Then the only thing left is for her to have an abortion."

"No!" A wild sob tore through my body. "I don't want an abortion! I won't have one! I want to keep my baby!"

Doris shook her head. "She's crazy," she said to my father as if I weren't even there.

The next day she took me to a doctor. After he confirmed my pregnancy, Doris told him she wanted an abortion performed. But he shook his head.

"This young lady is almost five months along," he said. "It's too late for an abortion."

Doris held her temper until we were out of the doctor's office. She went into a terrible rage, telling me over and over what an idiot I was to have gotten myself into such a predicament. She couldn't wait to get home so she could tell Dad what the doctor had said.

"You'll be leaving in a couple of weeks and I don't intend to be stuck here taking care of her!" she stormed. "And if she keeps the kid the way she's been talking, it'll be even worse." She slung her coat over a chair with an angry twist of her arm. "She's your problem, Harvey. So what are you going to do about it?"

Dad looked a little bewildered because apparently he thought the whole matter would be settled when Doris took me to the doctor. Now he was finding the unpleasantness hadn't gone away as he'd hoped it would.

"Well, we'll get something worked out," he mumbled after a little silence. "Just give me some time to think about it."

And that's all she could ever get out of him when she tried to talk to him about it afterward. It really infuriated Doris but it didn't change anything. I have a feeling when Dad shipped out again in April he was only too glad to be leaving all his troubles behind.

I'd already quit school by that time, of course, and could tell the months ahead weren't going to be any Sunday school picnic for me. Doris hated me with a pure venom now and she made no bones about letting me know exactly how she felt.

Always finding fault

It was still up to me to cook the meals and do the housework, but naturally nothing I did ever pleased her. She was always finding fault, going into an angry tirade at the drop of a hat. The way she yelled at me sometimes I was sure everyone on the whole block could hear every word.

But I was to find out things were going to get a whole lot worse before Doris was through with me. It all started the afternoon I slipped out of the house to go for a little walk while she was taking a nap. I couldn't have been gone more than a half hour, but the minute I stepped onto the front porch, the door banged open and she grabbed hold of my arm, yanking me into the house. Her eyes were blazing with fury.

"What in God's name is the matter with you?" she shrieked. "How could you go roaming all over the neighborhood with that big belly of yours sticking out the way it is? Don't you have any shame at all?"

"No, I'm not ashamed!" I retorted. "Why should I be? I loved the boy whose baby I'm carrying and he loved me." I gave her a defiant look. "Besides, I don't see any reason why I should keep it a secret — especially since everyone will know about it as soon as I have the baby."

"No one will ever know!" Her fingers clamped around my arm like a steel vise. "Not if I can help it! You're giving the baby away as soon as it's born, understand?"

"No!" I cried, jerking away from her. "You can't make me give my baby up."

"We'll see about that!" She seized me again and this time no matter how much I jerked and twisted I couldn't break loose. She was as strong as an ox as she dragged me up the stairs to my room.

"You asked for this!" she snapped. "I can't keep my eye on you every minute."

She thrust me into the room, slammed the door and locked it. With a loud sob, I flung myself at the door, beating against it until my knuckles were raw. But it didn't do any good. I was locked in my room for the rest of the day.

Around 6:00 she came in with a tray that held a greasy pork chop, some limp string beans and a mound of watery mashed potatoes. My stomach churned at the sight of it, but even if she'd brought me a decent meal I was too distraught to choke down any food.

After that it was like some long, awful nightmare that never came to an end. I couldn't believe what was happening to me.

She'd let me out of my room during the daytime but every time she had to go out, I'd be shut up in my room again. It was the same thing every night.

All she ever did was lie around in her bathrobe smoking cigarettes, drinking beer and watching the soap operas on TV. However, by the end of the second week I could sense she was beginning to get restless. She didn't enjoy staying home every night. She was starting to miss the tavern friends she hadn't been seeing lately.

The next Saturday evening I found myself locked in my room at 7:00. A half hour later, when I heard the front door slam shut, I knew Doris was out to have herself a good time. She went out almost every night after that, sleeping so late the next day it was often past noon before she'd come to let me out of my room.

Oh, God, I felt at times as if I were slowly losing my mind. My life had become a blur of days and nights with nothing in between. And it was a whole month yet until my baby was due to be born.

My room faced the vacant house next door, so there was no chance of my contacting any neighbors to let them know of my plight. But maybe there was a way I might be able to escape. I'd seen this movie once where a young girl, locked in an upstairs room by a freaky, old woman who was plotting to kill her, had managed to escape by cutting sheets into strips and tying them together.

She'd slid out the window one night while the old woman was in bed.

My heart began to race with excitement. It was 9:00 in the morning, but Doris was still in bed and I was sure she'd stay there at least another couple of hours. I got scissors out of my bureau drawer and set to work.

I was just starting to tie knots in the sheets when suddenly the door opened and Doris stood there glaring at me. "What do you think you're doing?"

I was too stunned to say anything, to do anything but sit there helplessly on the floor while she came and snatched the scissors out of my hand. In less than five minutes she'd gathered up the sheet remnants, stripped the blankets from the bed and carried everything away. A moment later she returned and flung a sleeping bag into the room.

"You can use that from now on," she hissed. She slammed the door and locked it and for punishment and I didn't get out of my room for the next three days.

I was beginning to have horrible nightmares that would wake me up in the middle of the night. I'd dream I was falling off a mountain cliff with death waiting to claim me when my body struck the jagged rocks below.

Over and over again in the middle of the night I'd wake up, bathed in a cold sweat and with my heart pounding, almost unable to believe I was still alive.

It was one night as I was jolted again out of one of my nightmares that my labor pains started. I didn't know what time it was or whether Doris was even at home, but I got out of bed and began to pound on my bedroom door in a frenzy. Finally the door opened and Doris stood there in a green, flannel night gown. She looked angry.

"I'm in labor!" I cried. "You've got to get me to a hospital!"

"The first thing you'd better do is get calmed down!" she snapped. She left the room and returned with some pills and a glass of water. "Here, take these. They'll help ease the pain a little."

I floated in a gray haze during those next hours, only dimly aware of what was going on as Doris bent over the bed

CURTIS MAYFIELD: EYEING ACTING ROLE? On the success of several movie scores like "Claudine," "Superfly," "Let's Do It Again" and the current "Sparkle," Mayfield plans to do a movie with his company. He plans to use major recording artists in non-musical as well as musical roles. He and business partner Marv Stuart plan to make the movie in 1977. They are looking for non-explorative black properties. Mayfield plans to act as well as score the movie, and if his acting is anywhere near his writing and producing, he should do extra well. Curtis, I think you will do fine.

PRODUCER LEAVES MOTOWN: Famed producer Norman Whitfield left Motown and inked with Warner Bros. He inked a co-publishing and distributing deal for his new label, Whitfield Records, as well as a writing agreement for himself. First group to sign with his label is The Undisputed Truth with whom he worked for many years at Motown. Another group signed is Rose Royce, who appeared in "The Car Wash," a Universal film. Whitfield produced such Temptations hits as "Papa Was A Rolling Stone."

RECORD RAMBLINGS: Mary Wells, known for such hits as "You Beat Me To The Punch" ('62) and "My Guy" ('64), will make her first album in eight years for Philadelphia International Records . . . George Benson has picked up his first gold record for the album "Breezin'." At the height of its sales, the album was selling an incredible 100,000 units per week. Congratulations, George . . . Actress-singer Ella Woods, who was with the Platters for nearly two years, will have her own TV special soon, if not by the time you read this. Ella did the love song to the Jim Brown starrer, "Slaughter." She co-starred in "House on Skull Mountain," which will be re-released under a new title. Woods is managed by Joe Hartsfield, the first black publicity director, as well as being the first to hold that job period, for "Gunsmoke."

FOUR TOPS, ABC RECORDS SETTLE DIFFERENCES: Veteran music makers, the Four Tops have resumed their high-speed career after settling their differences with ABC Records. Their hits include "Reach Out I'll Be There," "I Can't Help Myself" and "Baby, I Need Your Loving." The label's board chairman said, "... we at ABC are proud to continue our relationship with artists of such consistent talent." I'm sure the group's fans will be happy to hear the good news.

HANSBERRY'S WIDOWER STARTS RECORD LABEL: Bob Nemiroff, widower of the late great authoress-playwright Lorraine Hansberry, has set up his own record label, Dried Grape Records, and is set to record songs from "Raisin," the musical version of Miss Hansberry's last play before the "Sign in Brustein's Window." The first release was by Darren Green, called "Sidewalk Tree." When she died of cancer in 1965, at age 34, she left many unpublished writings as well as plays, one of which Nemiroff created, "To Be Young, Gifted and Black."

THE EXIT NEWS: Dobie Gray recently confessed that he didn't get paid for his two big hits, "Look At Me" and "The In Crowd." I don't have proof nor can I get anyone in high places to confirm it, but a lot of this is going on in 1976. It's very sad, too . . . Did you know that the Blackbyrds always appear with their manager-producer Donald Byrd, who records for Blue Note, even though they are on a different label, Fantasy? The group — fresh off of their success with last hit single "Rock Creek Park," is enjoying other hits from their neatly packaged "City Life" album. Byrd is enjoying performing and teaching.

On Sanctified Hill where my husband and I lived was just another black section in Kentucky; the streets were made of red clay dirt that seemed rock hard during the summer, while during the fall it was nothing but boggy red mud.

The shanties where the blacks lived were very far apart, and most of them were heated by coal inside an open fireplace.

It was fall the day I took six bullets and put them in the chamber of the .38 automatic. Outside it seemed to have been raining cats and dogs. This would be my first time shooting anyone and I wondered how it would feel. To tell the truth, I was scared, but my husband was bringing home his woman to sleep in my bed.

I took the pistol and put it in the pocket of my housecoat and waited inside the kitchen near the back door.

Last week — Monday, to be exact — I had my 40th birthday and most people said I looked well since I'd been home from the state hospital. I had mirrors in my house and I knew they were lying. It seems strange how a marriage can fall apart after you have been together for 15 years. James and I loved each other and we had always been good sex partners. So why did he need a mistress?

All began to go wrong

In 15 years many things can go wrong with a marriage, but I remember well when it all began to go wrong for us.

When our baby was born 10 years ago, I had a rough time giving birth, and the doctor said it was a miracle that he even lived.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Chapple," Dr. Cooper said softly as I lay there inside the City Hospital, "you won't be able to have another child. Be thankful for this one."

I looked down at the small life that was cooing beside me, and whispered how thankful I was. We named our son after my husband — James Chapple Jr. For the first few months I don't know who loved little Jamie the most, me or his dad. We took turns holding him whenever my husband was home. We had gone to every doctor in the city and had almost given up on having a child, so when he came five years after we'd been married, we thanked God each and every night for this blessing.

Jamie was a good baby, seldom crying like other babies I'd known, and most anybody could make him smile.

"I can hardly wait until he grows up, Sandra," James said to me one day while holding Jamie on his knee.

I guess it was that day I realized how possessed I was of the baby. I took him away from James without even giving him the consideration of being the father.

"It's time for his nap," I said slyly, then took the baby and walked away. At first James was hurt, then he got angry and hurried out of the house. At that time I didn't mind my husband leaving me alone. I had the baby to keep me company.

After that, I didn't notice it much at the time, James seldom held Jamie any more, and he seemed to drift further and further away. I was a young mother and a fool, so I didn't realize it was a bad sign to selfishly harbor all the love of a child.

When Jamie was five, I realized that James and I weren't having sex nearly as much as we used to, and some nights I had waited up for him until it was past midnight because lately he hadn't bothered to come home on Monday and Friday nights. When I found the yellow stains on his undershorts, I knew he was seeing some other woman. One Tuesday evening after I'd fixed dinner, I told him I wasn't going to put up with his cheating any longer.

"Don't be crazy, Sandra," he said brutally. "I worked a double shift last night!"

"Fred Hill works on the same shift you do and he came home last night!" I answered him in a hellish tone.

"So what? Fred only pulls coal. I dig it, dammit!" James was really annoyed with me, to say the least.

"You think I don't know about you and Freda?" I asked sarcastically. "I know where you've been, so stop lying!"

James was raving with anger, and I was glad he called me dirty names, because I had only been guessing about Freda, a woman whose name I had found in one of his shirt pockets. She was a good-looking woman, and had come to our town two years ago from Detroit.

James pushed his chair from the table with a savage force, took his coat from behind the door and shouted, "Don't wait up for me! I won't be home!"

I stood there with my eyes closed, then I heard the door slam and knew he was gone. That night when I put Jamie to bed I told him his daddy had gone back to work, and that he wouldn't have to wait for him to come in and kiss him goodnight.

For the next few months James was like a ghost around the house. He said as little as he could to me and Jamie. Then came the fights. Sometimes I slapped him so hard across the face when he tried touching me at night, he was momentarily blind. Sometimes he would hit me back, but not very hard. Most of the time he would just shout and call me dirty names. Then he would take from me whatever he wanted.

Two years ago, on the day of Jamie's birthday, the few children who had been invited had left, and his father, who had gone to get another small case of ginger ale from the store, had been gone for at least three hours. It was certain he wasn't coming back. I wonder if I'll ever forget that night.

I went into the bathroom to make sure Jamie had left the tub clean, and there he lay, his small body doubled into a knot. For a moment I panicked and cold fear ran throughout my body. I screamed and called my husband's name more times than once. I knew from the moment I saw him, that he was suffering from more than just a stomach ache.

"Honey! Answer me, honey!" I whispered to him, then picked him up and hurried out the door.

Spinal meningitis

At City Hospital they called Dr. Cooper, and right away he diagnosed the case as spinal meningitis and had no idea where Jamie had gotten the contagious disease. Right then the hospital asked for every child who had been at the birthday party that evening and put them under observation. I sat quietly inside the waiting room watching the four walls and wondering where my husband could be.

If ever we needed James, it was then. I went to the phone and called every honky-tonk joint near Sanctified Hill, then I called Johnson's boarding house over in the next town.

Very quietly a voice said, "Boarding house, Freda speaking."

"Is James Chappel there?" I asked in a very nasty tone, but never once told her who I was.

"He's not here. Who's calling?" the voice asked on the other end of the receiver.

I slammed the phone down in her ear. Later that night, while doctors and nurses went in and out of Jamie's room, I sat there all alone — too scared to think of what might have been happening, and too scared and upset to even think of praying.

I was born and raised right there on Sanctified Hill. My mother died in childbirth and my dad lived until I was 26. He had been hurt inside the coal mines and had died slowly, so God had given me time to get ready for his death, though it hurt me when he died. It was nothing like the moment when Dr. Cooper came out of Jamie's room and placed his arm around my shoulder.

"We lost him, Mrs. Chappel!" the doctor said sadly.

I remember screaming over and over again until Dr. Cooper had a nurse give me a shot and I slipped into darkness, fighting consciousness with all my might. I wondered why God had done this awful thing to me. What had I done? I needed my baby. He had been so young for God to take.

Times of emptiness

For almost two years after Jamie's death, the time seemed blurred to me. Part of the time I wondered what had happened to my husband that night, but most of the two years I spent at the state hospital I experienced times of long emptiness. Oh, I remember several times when James drove up to see me. He sometimes brought pretty things, but whenever I mentioned Jamie, he could never look me directly in the face.

"I'm sorry about that night, Sandra. Only God knows how much I've suffered. I was wrong." He held my hand.

I pulled away from him and slipped back into emptiness. I wanted more than anything else to go home with him, but the more I fought to stabilize my consciousness, the deeper I seemed to sink into a well of nihilism.

I remember the times James pleaded with me for forgiveness, but I never consented. Why should I? On the night my baby died he was somewhere drinking booze and good-timing. I was content in my world of suffering as I turned away from James and the rest of the world.

Once I even received a letter from Freda. Didn't she realize that my mind was sick and I was in the state hospital trying to recover? It wasn't enough that she had taken my husband. I tore up the letter.

On the day when my consciousness stabilized I felt like a new person. I soon recovered enough to think of the life ahead of me. Weeks passed, then months, until it was soon time for me to go home. James had given up trying to convince me how sorry he was. He just came and got me and drove me back home to Sanctified Hill. Many of my friends came by that week, and a few women who had never been inside my house before, came by to wish me well. Well, except Clara Jenkins, who told me about the way

James and Freda had been carrying on since I'd been away.

"I don't know how to tell you this, honey," as she fixed the straw-colored wig that had cocked sideways on her head, then drank another sip of coffee. "Now don't blame me for it," she said, without waiting for me to answer her. She plunged on. "They carried on something awful. Every day God sent it seemed as if that Freda was up here at your house. And I told Willa Mae no longer than day before yesterday . . . Sandra Chappel isn't gonna like this one bit."

After that day, few women came to see me, and I never answered the door for Clara Jenkins again. Each week James carried me back to see my psychiatrist, and my husband and I said very little to each other. There were times when I let him know I still knew about him and Freda.

"How is she?" I asked on the last evening he was driving me home from the hospital.

"I'm glad the doctor released you, Sandra," he said, pretending to ignore my question.

"You heard me!" I snapped at him.

He shook his head from side to side. "I'm not gonna fight with you, Sandra. You've been through enough already!"

I laughed contemptuously. "Who gave you religion?"

James never took his eyes away from the narrow roadway that crossed the huge mountains of Harlan County. He told me he would never divorce me, no matter what, and he even said he wanted us to adopt a child. But no matter how many times we slept together and how many times we had sex, it wasn't like it had been before the tragic death of Jamie. James felt guilty about not being there at the time we lost our son, though he and I both knew his presence wouldn't have saved him, but it might have made his dying more acceptable.

We made very little love in the following weeks, and it was like it was before I went to the hospital. Some nights he wouldn't even come home. I wanted to leave that house more than anything, and get as far away from that damn hill as I possibly could. I never told James how much Jamie had suffered before he died, and I never really told him how shocking the boy's death had been to me ... never once did I ever mention to him that Jamie's death had been inevitable.

I kept this secret from him, although he might have known there was nothing he could have done, but as long as he felt guilty I could continue to blame him.

On the night James swore to bring Freda by our house, the next morning he and I had fought for almost an hour. I was in a bad mood all day, and took it out on him.

Nothing but a slut

"Freda is a whore!" I bounced up from the bed and swung my legs to the floor. "Every man on Sanctified Hill has had her in bed! She's nothing but a slut!"

"Yeah, I can dig on that, too!" James reached over a cigarette from the night stand. I knew he was good and angry.

"What's the matter, lover boy?" I taunted him. "Poor little Freda can't do anything this time of month?"

"Freda is better than you are in the sack!" he grinned over his shoulder at me. I stood there too dumb to speak. "Cat got your tongue?" he laughed in a self-satisfied tone.

"She's cheap, and she's dirty!" I shouted as I hurried across the floor.

"Freda is a better lover!" he screamed at me as I went through the door. "Damn good lover!"

I went into the small bedroom across the hall and closed the door. I heard James come laughing across the hallway screaming and shouting. Then he stopped laughing long enough to tell me that the next day he was bringing Freda home with him for her to show me how to make love.

"Be a fool, James, but don't be a damn fool!" I shouted through the locked door at him.

"We'll give you the whole scoop on lovemaking tomorrow morning!" He took his fist and almost tore the door down as he pounded it several times.

It was long after midnight when he stopped pounding and kicking on the outside bedroom door, and later I fell across the bed and went to sleep. This was Jamie's room, and for a moment I had the strange feeling that he was still alive. I remember how the thought frightened me just before I fell asleep.

I was surprised when I found that

James had already left the house when I got out of bed the next morning. It was Saturday and my husband never worked on Saturday or Sunday mornings. I hoped he hadn't gone to pick up Freda. I had been pushed far enough already. I took a quick bath and then dressed.

After looking in the mirror I wasn't pleased at all with the dress I had chosen. I hurried and rambled through the closet until I found another.

After two hours had passed I drenched myself in perfume that I had gotten from a lady at the hospital. I found a bottle of Scotch lying in the bottom of the night stand, and took two good drinks... then I took another. I guess it was then the thought first entered my mind to get the pistol from the chest drawer and when Freda sets foot inside the door, close your eyes and point the gun at her, then pull the trigger as fast as you can.

I had never killed anyone before. This would be my first time ever shooting a handgun. The automatic felt so cold and awkward.

I became afraid

Suddenly I heard footsteps... I stood away from the door until I heard James' key unlock it. Before they knew what was happening or could even speak a word, James and the attractive woman were standing there before me, staring down the barrel of the .38. At first I was angry and hate was written all over my face, but then I became afraid and almost faint.

"James talked about you all the time." Freda looked back at him. "Hey, you guys sure are lucky to have each other. You know what I mean? I mean understanding each other the way you do."

"Well, if I ever get married, I want my husband to be a real swinger like we are. No jealousy and no fool scenes. You know how men are." She leaned over and grinned. "Kill right now over a piece of tail!"

As I stood there trying to understand exactly what was happening, I pieced together the whole thing. James wasn't a lover boy, not by a long shot. He pretended while I was away I had given him permission to have sex outside our marriage. I guess my mouth was hanging open longer than it should have been, because he took me by the hand and carried me off into the bedroom. He thanked me for not exposing him to Freda, then he laughed as he took the .38 from beneath my apron.

"I'm not going to let this woman sleep in my bed, James!" I protested.

My husband pretended he never heard me. He just started to undress as he pulled back the sheets on my bed. Freda came into the bedroom with a smile spread across her lips. She wore only panties and a half slip, so it took her only seconds to undress. I turned my head as she fell down across the bed into my husband's outstretched arms. For a moment I thought I was dreaming. I thought maybe they had sent the wrong person to the state hospital... maybe James and Freda should have gone!

When I turned and looked at them again, she was straddled across James' naked body and was kissing him all over his hairy chest. Was she this hungry for my man? As I stood there half dazed, I wondered what had happened to me? Why hadn't I made love to my man this way? Right then and there I realized how wrong I had been. I had no right to make James feel guilty about our son's death.

I had no right to hold back my love from him. I hurried and pulled off my clothes — still drunk — but deep down inside I knew what I was doing.

"Come on, Sandra." Freda slipped off James' body like a skimming snake and rested her hand on my naked bottom.

This was the first time a woman had ever touched my flesh, and for a moment I shook all over. Suddenly I felt James' arm slip around my waist and forgot everything that had haunted me for the last five years.

That was just the beginning of our lovemaking. Freda sometimes came to our place and stayed all night. And sometimes I let her make love to me when James wasn't home. I never as much as kissed her, but I let her do to my body whatever she pleased.

Freda left Sanctified Hill and some people said she went back to Detroit. Maybe she did. My husband and I never saw her once she left Harlan County. Looking back over those strange times, I wondered if Freda knew how much she meant to us. We adopted a child a few weeks ago, a boy, and as soon as they get a little girl, we're going to adopt her, too.

KEEPING YOUR SKIN LOOKING YOUTHFUL

Every day we live, we get a little bit older, but that does not mean we have to "look" older. We can grow old gracefully and still retain our youthful looking skin by taking a few facial exercises daily.

As we grow older, the skin loses its elasticity, and lines and wrinkles are formed in the forehead, around the eyes and mouth, and the muscles sag, causing double chins and drooping jaw lines.

Facial muscles are the only muscles of the body attached to skin as well as to bone and muscles, and it is particularly important that they be kept in shape. When the facial muscles are in tone, your skin looks younger.

Professional models and actresses know the value of maintaining tone in the facial muscles under the skin, so they exercise them, while they use external surface treatments of creams and oils. These same exercises can be beneficial to the average woman who wants to maintain a youthful appearance.

Dryness is also a common problem as one grows older, but just as troublesome is a combination oily and dry skin. Take for instance, the forehead, nose and chin can be oily, while the rest of the complexion is dry. In these non-oily areas the problem shows up in ashy patches. A moisturizing soap can help bring your complexion back to an overall normal condition.

After you wash or cleanse your face and neck, try these exercises:

For deep furrows around the mouth or a double chin, hold your head upright, with chin tilted up and lips closed. Separate the lower and upper teeth as much as possible without parting the lips. Slowly return the teeth to normal with an exaggerated chewing motion. Do this 20 times.

To keep the neck and chin muscles in tone, drop your right ear to your right shoulder, then turn your chin in the opposite direction, with chin pointing up.

Return the chin to the right shoulder position, with head down.

Do the same exercise on your left side, dropping your left ear to your left shoulder and turning your chin to the right with the chin pointing up. Return your chin to the left shoulder, holding your head down. Repeat these exercises five times.

To help do away with crow's feet, raise your brows and lift the upper lids. Slowly bring the upper and lower lids together. Concentrate on the lids resisting each other. Slowly open the eyes, moving the lids at the same pace. Do this five times.

To help smooth loose neck skin and jowls, drop your head back so the face is parallel to the ceiling. Pucker your lips in a kiss position, then stretch up as if you're kissing the ceiling, then slowly release and grin widely at the ceiling, pulling the mouth corners down. Do this five times each day.

Another one that will be beneficial to the neck and jowls: Lie at the edge of your bed so the shoulders are even with the bed edge. With head back, hanging over the bed, bring the head forward and to the right, rotating so the nose and chin touch the right shoulder. Return to the original position. Do this five times, then do the same on the opposite side, rotating the head forward to the left five times.

For upper and lower eyelid droop (morning eye swelling), squeeze eyes tightly shut, release the squeeze and lift the brows without opening the eyes, stretching the upper lids as wide as possible. Release slowly. Do this five times daily.

To help firm the upper cheek area, flare the nostrils and raise the fullest "apple" area of cheeks towards eyes. Tighten the cheek muscles until the upper lip curls slightly upwards, then slowly return to the normal position, five times.

If you will do these exercises each day and use the proper skin preparations to help, you will see a great improvement within just two weeks.

THE "BED SACK"

A new way to wake up your mattress

An unmade bed was once a very unbecomful thing. That was before the "bed sack," a revolutionary new kind of mattress padding that makes a bed almost as beautiful bare as it is all made up. The "bed sack," from Perfect Fit Industries, is quilted all over to instantly re-upholster mattresses — even, and most importantly, box springs and bed platforms. It simply slips on and contour-pads the sides of the mattress or box spring, as well as the top, giving an elegant finished look to the bed.

Unmade, the bed is smooth, soft and entirely cushioned in an abstract floral quilted design. With exclusive Quiltra-sonic stitching, there are no threads to snag or break and no seams to mar looks or comfort.

The "bed sack" can be machine washed and dried repeatedly with minimum stretching, shrinking, wrinkling or puckering. The fabric is soft, extremely strong and drapable to insure perfect fit for the life of the pad.

The contour cushioning of the "bed sack" makes a made-up bed look even better. It doesn't shift or slide out of place and its padded corners and edges make fitted sheets fit more smoothly.

What's more, while the "bed sack" has a big advantage in looks, comfort and washability, it also compares favorably in price with mattress pads currently on the market. It is available in twin, full, queen and king sizes. Matching "pillow sacks," which help pillows hold their shape and give an attractive non-allergenic covering, come in four sizes — twin, full, queen and king.

SEX OBJECT FOR NO-GOOD MEN

keep you out of the kind of trouble you have a habit of getting into."

While dressing for Henry, I gave some thought to my best friend's advice. I decided she spent too little time dating to be an authority on the subject. I often teased that she was waiting for the perfect man. She rarely went out.

On the infrequent occasion when she did go out, the man had to really have something on the ball. I thought she would have been a lot happier had she been surrounded by men. I decided she wasn't prepared to pay the price.

Some people had accused me of having an excessive need for security because they claimed I had too many men running in and out of my life, sometimes during the same periods.

Whether this was true, I wasn't prepared to say. The only thing that I knew for sure was I was terribly lonesome.

I wanted one man to come and sweep me off my feet and marry me. For this small favor, I would have gladly gotten rid of all the other men, including Fred.

I drank a few shots of brandy while waiting for Henry. My nerves were not supporting me properly until the brandy quieted them. I was sitting by the window when Henry drove up in his new Dodge. He was dressed in a pin-striped brown suit with vest.

I couldn't decide whether he looked like a successful lawyer or a preacher. My heart had quickened its pace with anticipation. It began to dawn on me I loved this man.

"Sit down, Henry, and take a load off your feet. Would you like a glass of brandy?" I was trying to make a serious moment seem light.

"I'll pass," he answered. I decided he looked more like a preacher this time. Henry and I both worked on a civil service job where Henry was fast working himself up the ranks. I worked in an office just down the hall from the one in which he worked. "Well, Connie," he was saying, "it must be awfully serious if you'll pass up a chance to go out in favor of staying home."

"Henry, Fred isn't my cousin." Again, I went directly to the heart of the matter. Fascinated and scared at the same time, I watched as he attempted to control his facial muscles. It was as if he knew what was coming next.

I didn't keep him in doubt. The entire past evening and the acts of the day were unraveled to him. I marveled at his control. Through descriptions of the rape, stealing, cashing the check, and Fred's snoring, Henry didn't say a word.

He had me scared

Finally he got up and paced the floor. "Connie, I don't know what to say. Why didn't you call the police after he raped you?" When I didn't offer an answer, he continued, "The fact you took his checks, credit cards and cashed one of his checks can mean only you want him to return to your home again. Connie, are you still in love with this man?"

Now he really had me scared. I could just see him walking out the door never to return. "I'm through with him forever. Tell me, how can I love a man who has no respect for me? Henry, I need your support. Don't tell me you are deserting me in my time of misery? I need your protection from men walking in here and taking what they want. I can't protect myself."

Henry jumped up and paced the floor again. I sat there as if my life hung in the balance. "Connie ... Connie," he managed finally, "I have to think this over. If I talk now, I may say things I'll regret later. Can I meet with you at work tomorrow for lunch? By then I'll be able to talk."

"What is there to think about? After all, I'm the injured party." I was beginning to feel deserted, like a sinking ship.

"I am bothered," he said, "by your actions. You can't even tell the police about his raping you because you stole and cashed his check. You've put yourself at his mercy. Your so-called cousin can now have you arrested. Connie, when his check statement reaches him, he'll have proof of what you did."

At his mercy

"I'm having trouble accepting the fact you have so totally put yourself at his mercy. I was beginning to fall in love with you, Connie. I was beginning to think of you as my future wife, if you would have had me. Your news has hit me pretty hard."

"What about me?" I demanded. For the next half hour, I must have repeated that statement 10 times. At length, Henry got my promise to meet him for lunch the next day. I was disappointed with his attitude toward my misfortune.

Evelyn took his side when I called her on the phone. She did, at least, have more sympathy for me. "What did you expect him to do?" she asked.

"I expected him to go over there and tap dance on Fred's body," I informed her. Evelyn answered with something about some roast burning in the oven and promised to call me later.

I could only hope Henry would come to his senses by lunch time. He had, after all, mentioned something about marriage. It was that magic word that caused me to agree to meeting him for lunch. If he would just calm down slightly, a marriage proposal should be soon forthcoming, I concluded in my mind. I slept that night with great hopes and expectations.

We sat at a corner table. I stared at the white tablecloth, tracing an embroidered pattern in my mind, while Henry groped for the courage to tell me the news. By the time he cleared his throat, to clear my suspense, I could already sense bad news. "Er, Connie," he began, "I - er ... that is, I really don't know how to put this, because I still love you."

Enraged, and fighting back tears, I looked hard into his face. Funny how handsome he looked at that moment. I had truly forgotten it was his looks that had first attracted me to him. He didn't have as wild or as magnetic a personality as Fred, but he certainly was a good deal more handsome.

"Henry, just come right out and say it.

You don't want to see me again. Don't be a coward!"

"I don't have your admirable directness, Connie. However, here goes: I want to remain friends with you, and if you will allow me I will still take you to the movies and such since I am not dating anyone else. It occurs to me our friendship would be damaged if we continued as potential lovers. I still love you, but I'm convinced you are attracted more elsewhere. So let's just be friends, okay?"

I knew I was making a fool of myself running out of the restaurant like that. It was either run like an idiot or sit there and cry like a baby. Throughout that day and for several weeks, I refused to communicate with Henry.

Being basically the insecure type, I was at no loss for male companionship. My phone stayed fairly active because men knew I stayed fairly available. I never took any one man that seriously, although Evelyn said it was a mistake for me to assume all men were playing games. "You get what you are looking for," she insisted.

I grew bored of the games. The games consisted of my going out with different men who tried to maneuver me into bed while I tried to get them to show by sign or action they really cared.

Gifts or constant spending of money on me was such a sign. If enough was spent, I grew weak with affection for the man, and if he were really cute, he might score. In such a case we both scored.

In time, the wound Henry made healed and we slowly started becoming friends as he wished. Occasionally, we took in a movie, or had lunch together. Our friendship grew and our luncheon dates grew increasingly numerous, but nothing more than friendship was happening.

It was strictly a platonic affair. Without my talks with Henry, I don't know whether I would have made it. I looked forward to seeing him, especially after a bad evening with some date who turned out to be loathsome. With Henry I could be myself.

It would be unfair to claim I wasn't having fun much of the time going out with different men. Some of the dates turned out to be great fun. Fred had come by several times, but I refused to let him in the door. When he called, I hung up. Still, he was beginning to come by more often and I was growing fearful of the future.

In the midst of all this activity, Samson Hicks called one day, completely upsetting the pattern.

Exciting man

Next to Fred, Samson was the one other man I had felt strongly about. Like Fred, he was an exciting man. I hadn't heard from him for more than a year. Samson was a merchant seaman and was wont to go away for long periods of time. Well, he was back and he was loaded with money.

He moved in on me so fast all other men went right out of my life, except Henry, of course. Henry was necessary to my stability; he was like the sunshine. I told Henry about Samson and Henry pretended to be happy for me. I knew he was faking, but he carried it off with class, I thought.

Samson wine and dined me for days. He was like an inexhaustible source of money, and even sexier than Fred. With some misgivings we started having sex. The reason I gave in to him without his proposing had, oddly enough to do with Fred. Fred had showed up one day ringing away on the bell while Samson was there.

"Let that dude in!" Samson said roughly, standing up to his full height. He also outweighed Fred by about 40 pounds. He was a big, handsome dude. He already knew the facts concerning Fred and me. Needless to say, I felt less threatened by Fred since Samson had started coming around.

Samson stayed in the background while I let Fred in the door. Being as direct as I was, Fred turned on his mouth before he got in the door. "I got my credit cards you sent in the mail. I didn't even know you knew where I lived, baby. It's about time you let me in here; I was getting ready to go to the cops with that canceled check you cashed. I just wanted to renew our relationship," Fred finished, grabbing for me as I moved out of reach.

He followed me and walked right into Samson. Samson grabbed him by the collar and said, "Hold on there, dude. Just stop right there," Samson warned. "You touch this lady and me and you gonna go to fast city, dig it?"

"I - I don't want no trouble, man," Fred gulped quickly. Samson had a deep bass voice that had a way of scaring the pants off anybody. "If this is your old lady, then I'll steer clear." Looking at Fred, I could tell he was scared witless.

"Connie told me you forced yourself on her. No man will ever play that kind of stuff with her as long as I'm around. I advise you to be cool, dude, and getting on. If you show up around here again, we won't talk, understand?" Samson quite obviously meant every word.

I didn't know whether to laugh or feel pity for Fred as he retreated out of my house and down the stairs. It was obvious he wanted to run. I watched with revulsion from my window as he ran to his car. Safely locked in his car, he roared away with tires screaming for open road. Most of what I felt for him died. I was then free to devote myself to Samson.

With relief, I rushed into Samson's arms close to tears. He hadn't asked to marry me yet, but he had protected me. Samson closed his massive arms about me and I became lost in the power of his physique and love. I gave in completely to his caressing. Clouds seem to float endlessly by as he lowered me to the bed.

Exquisite pain filled me to overflowing. I melted into his body until it seemed I would never have enough of him. I moaned loudly while scratching his large, beautiful arms.

He was kissing me at every place he could reach. I started kissing in return and biting gently until his lips found mine hot and hungry. Together we fell into a convulsive abyss of giving. As suddenly as it began, it ended and I knew I was in love and had to have this man.

From that day forward we became inseparable; Samson was over every day. We spent his money until I began to feel wealthy. I shared my joy with Henry and Evelyn whenever I saw them. Evelyn expressed reservations about the entire affair, but Henry seemed genuinely happy for me, although I knew he must have been crying his heart out.

Henry and I had lunch less frequently now because Sam (I had started calling my man Sam) usually came to pick me up for lunch. At one of our lunch breaks, Henry informed me he had invested in a gas station now being run by his uncle during the day. He ran the station himself during the evening until 10. I felt really happy he had some consolation for losing me, and I also told Evelyn of Henry's good fortune.

Evelyn was striking out on her own, but unlike Henry, she was leaving her job. She had leased a beauty parlor and scheduled a party to announce the opening to all her friends and old customers. There was little doubt she was going to do very well. Naturally, Sam and I were invited to the party. I urged Evelyn to allow me to invite Henry.

"Are you sure?" she asked, frowning. "I mean, Henry will come with some other woman. Are you sure you can stand seeing Henry with another woman?"

Just good friends

"I keep telling you," I said, "Henry and I are finished! We are just good friends. I don't care who he shows up with. I want Henry to be happy."

Sam and I continued our blissful lives with less enthusiasm, at least for me. Sam was making no effort to propose. His money apparently was running low because he had started pinching pennies. We weren't going out any more and he was hinting at moving into my place.

Sam had given me so much I felt too guilty to refuse his request. I decided if he was going to move in, it might as well be an honest move. "Sam, when will you be going back to work on another ship?"

"In two months," he replied, "so I will have to move into your place for only two months. Honest, sugar, I only have a few dollars left; I really need to move in today."

I suddenly had visions of my feeding this large man for two months out of my salary. I could see myself dipping into my savings. The landlady was sure to raise the rent. Although our lovemaking never again reached the magic of the first occasion, still there were possibilities, but only if we were married. I told him bluntly we would have to get married before he moved in.

The next day I informed my boss I was going to Las Vegas to get married and would need a week off. He agreed. In total ecstasy, I dropped by Henry's office and phoned Evelyn from there. Henry pumped my hands and Evelyn expressed shock. She was a hard one to convince.

Off we went in my car and with my money to Las Vegas. The trip was routine. We checked into a motel, not into one of the expensive hotels. As we ventured closer and closer to the altar, Samson became more and more confused.

Then, out of the blue, he let me have it right between the eyes. He just couldn't go through with the marriage. I turned my mouth loose on him.

Living on welfare

"All right, all right!" he yelled into my frustrated tirade. "I'm already married. I don't love her. It's just that I never bothered to get a divorce. Besides, there are kids involved. I don't want to rush into a divorce that will force the courts to hit me with child support. She and the kids are living on welfare now and doing fine. I can't afford to rock the boat."

"Get out! Get out!" I screamed. I packed my bag while he tried to talk me into the advantages of our living together. We could tell people we were married. I covered my ears and tried not to listen. Instead, I finally climbed into my car and attempted to lock him out. He managed to get in and rode all the way back to Los Angeles with me. I ran the car — he ran his mouth.

Somewhere along the way I became convinced his was the only solution. I couldn't face the embarrassment of telling my friends I had been stood up at the last minute. Henry and Evelyn would sympathize, for all the good that would do me. Back home, I went along with the deception. All my girl friends were happy for me; Samson moved in, bag and baggage.

His attempts at making love to me met with total lack of success. I slept in the living room. It became increasingly difficult for me to have him in the same house.

When Evelyn or some friend came over, I put on a brave front. Samson took advantage of such occasions to hug and slobber over me. Most difficult of all was starting to have lunch with Henry again. Sam no longer could afford to take me to lunch.

I wanted so much to tell Henry the truth and have him take me in his arms and provide me with real security. I just didn't have the courage, nor did I believe he would accept my love as real. I had told him too much of my affair with

Sam. I took some consolation in the fact I never saw Henry with anyone else.

The evening of Evelyn's party finally came around. I tried as honestly as I could to be happy for her. I assisted her in preparations for the party. All that day I wondered who Henry would be bringing. I really didn't think I could face seeing him with another woman.

Sam and I arrived around 10. Evelyn's many friends and old customers had already almost filled the place. Henry made his appearance close to 11. He was alone. I was thrilled and taken completely by surprise. He was the only person at the party without a partner, except Evelyn, of course.

Henry wore a dark blue suit with vest. This time he looked like a budding businessman, which he was.

He was the only person at the party Evelyn had not met personally, so I performed the honors. "Evelyn, this is my old friend, Henry." I felt Sam's presence hovering about. While Evelyn offered her hand to Henry, Sam closed his arm about my waist.

"Charmed," Henry smiled. He seemed to be holding her hand too long. She didn't seem to be withdrawing, almost as if she had forgotten where her hand was. I wanted to pry the hands apart.

"I've — er, heard a lot about you, too, Evelyn," he continued shyly. "I really wish you the best on your salon. When are you officially opening?"

"Tomorrow," she replied, almost in a whisper, as if enchanted. "How is your gas station doing? Why didn't you quit your regular job as I did? You know, I have a million questions to ask you. Come over here and let's talk."

They talked and talked. I really think they forgot all about the party. The noise was ignored by the two of them. While others danced and laughed, they smiled, talked and occasionally they touched an arm or hand in making a point.

Around 3:00 the next morning, people started leaving. Henry and Evelyn had long since stopped drinking and had started sipping coffee. At some point in the evening they had stopped talking long enough to do a slow dance. I was dragged on the floor for all the slow numbers by Sam, so I watched them from the floor.

When Evelyn phoned me from her shop the next day, all excited, I had already girded myself for the news. She didn't claim to be in love. Evelyn was too cautious for that, but she did express the most agreeable thoughts about Henry. Unknowingly, she dug in the needle. "Connie, I'm glad you found happiness with Sam, but I don't know how you ever let Henry go. What a guy!"

In due course, Sam went on another ship. Henry proposed three months later to Evelyn. I would have kicked my tail if I could have reached it. I had given up on Henry after one month because he didn't buy me enough gifts and had not proposed. I realize now how stupid I had been. I'm working up the courage to tell Evelyn the truth about Sam. I have hesitated this long because I've met a man who saves his money and seems serious.

I've told this man about Sam. He knows I'm single. Evelyn thinks I'm planning to divorce Sam. She knows Sam and I had some terrible fight before he left. I guess I'm just a coward, but should things work out with this beautiful man, I shall then tell her. I don't wish to mar the beautiful marriage she has with Henry.

PAWN IN THE DEVIL'S CHESS GAME

stronger and the candles that glowed alongside one wall gave the room an eerie, hollow feeling.

"You brought something?" Madame Ruby asked.

"This," I said, pling a handkerchief out of my purse and handing it to Madame Ruby. It was one of Joe's. I had managed to sneak out of his pocket in the cafe.

"Good, good," Madame Ruby sat in her chair which she had placed across from mine. She was more than a fortune teller... she was a witch. At first I had laughed when she suggested placing spells on Jane to force the break-up of her and Joel's marriage.

I had come only out of curiosity and as a means to relieve my anxiety. I sure hadn't expected such a statement like that.

"I have powers," she had continued, "If you want to solve this problem, I can arrange it." I was tempted, but afraid of being made a fool. Then the madame suggested she prove she could conjure spells and less than a day later Joel had reported Jane was acting strange and driving him nuts with her erratic behavior.

Madame Ruby had proved herself, yet I was still afraid to go back to her. A witch is in league with the devil in my view and if I used her to tear Joel away from his wife, what did that make me? But it took only a few days to convince myself Joel was worth any risks I might take by associating with Madame Ruby.

Madame Ruby sniffed at the handkerchief I brought her. "Good," she said with a slight gleam in her eyes. "This smells of her scent. With this as our vehicle we can conjure the most powerful spell yet... it's too bad, though, we don't have something of hers.

"Some small piece of clothing, preferably something which clings next to her body and is familiar and intimate with her. Then we could act with much greater force." Madame Ruby looked at me closely.

"I'll try," I said, shrinking under her steady glance. "I doubt if I could manage that. But this is working. Joel himself said she's driving him nuts and that he can't stand it," I added brightly.

Madame Ruby could fix her eyes on me in the darkest gaze and make me almost tremble with the knowledge of her power. If I didn't believe in witchcraft before, I certainly did now.

Tried to contact spirits

Madame Ruby smiled at me and began to concentrate. She was absolutely still and silent and her eyes became glazed over. Slowly she began to mumble a chant as she ran her fingers over the blue handkerchief that lay on the table before her. She was trying to contact the spirits.

I sat for a long time, concentrating and trying to aid the madame's efforts and listening to her chant which was growing louder and louder. Suddenly a chill ran through me and I knew Madame Ruby was in contact with the spirit she was seeking.

"Cum daemonibus, incubus et succubis!" she screamed suddenly and twisted the handkerchief into a ball and then straightened it again violently. The spell had been cast, as I had seen it done several times before, and I waited for Madame Ruby to recover.

When she opened her eyes she looked with disgust at the handkerchief. "It's a spell, but not a powerful one. The name of the devil who has special charge over all works of fornication is Asmodeus. He is the prince of carnal impurity.

"The interpretation of his name is... the doom of judgment, for an account of such vices terrible execution was done on Gomorrah." Her words were horrible and I couldn't wait to get out of that house. I handed her a $20 bill and left.

"Remember," she said to me as I was making my way through the silk curtains.

"if you can get something close and adored by this woman..."

The air felt fresh when I got out of Madame Ruby's house. The visits and the spells were necessary if I wanted to have Joel for my own, but sitting with the witch gave me a scary feeling. To wash it away I went home and took a bath. I had to get ready for my date with Frank.

Frank was a man I had met at work. He was older than I was by almost five years, yet that hadn't stopped him from asking me out. And my affair with Joel hadn't stopped me from accepting, either. Dating Frank served two good purposes. First of all, it was a good defense against any rumors that might start if anyone saw Joel and me together, and secondly, it gave Joel more than just a slight prod to dump his wife and marry me.

I felt sorry using Frank because he was actually a nice man who had visions of our relationship getting serious. But to get Joel back I would do anything, including deceiving a nice man.

By the time I had finished my bath and fixed myself to go out, my doorbell was ringing. It was Frank and I let him in.

"You look better than ever, Christy," Frank said with a smile as he eyed me with admiration. "I just can't resist giving you a little kiss."

As he touched his lips on mine I felt a quiver run through me. Yes, that was the cause of the nibbling doubt I felt whenever I thought of my affair with Joel. As much as I tried to prevent myself from feeling it, I couldn't stop the comfortable glow that warmed me whenever I was with Frank.

"Just remember who you love and why you're doing this," I warned myself as Frank took his lips off mine.

"Feel like dinner tonight?" Frank asked. "Maybe go to a movie later?"

"That would be great, just great, Frank!" I said, and let him take my hand. In my heart, I was hoping we would see Joel wherever we went. The first time Joel had seen me with Frank he had exploded in a rage and I got a feeling of satisfaction as I watched him sit silently, his lips quivering in anger.

It served him right. If Joel would only ask Jane for a divorce then I wouldn't have to torment him by going out with Frank. But there was a baby to think of. I was beginning to hate that baby.

The more I dated Frank the more I couldn't help realize what a big difference there was between him and Joel. Frank seemed more sure of himself than Joel and he didn't have the wild crazy dreams my lover did. It was hard to keep from loving Frank.

Felt no shame

"I've been thinking, Christy," Frank began when I had gotten back to my apartment. I had fixed both of us a drink and had settled in beside him on the couch. I felt no shame at loving another man and being friendly with Frank. I had to have someone to warm my lonely nights. "It's about time we were getting married," Frank finished.

"Wh-what?" I almost spilled my drink on his lap out of shock. Desperately I hoped I had heard wrong. Surely Frank wasn't this far gone on me!

"I'm asking you to marry me, honey," Frank said gently and put his drink down on the coffee table. "I love you and you've said you love me..."

Terrified, I didn't know what to say. How could I accept? And yet, how could I refuse Frank without letting him, and everyone else in Riverburg, know I was carrying on secretly with Joel?

Frank was a good catch in anyone's eyes. If I refused him, especially after having dated him so long, a lot of people would become more than suspicious. Then an idea popped into my head. I would give Madame Ruby's spells a little help.

"Oh, Frank... I'd love to! When can we?" I said with as much sincerity as I could muster. As I felt his strong arms circling my shoulders and pulling me to him I couldn't help but smile.

Joel couldn't ignore the seriousness of our situation now. Coupled with the spells that were making his life with his wife intolerable, the news of my engagement to Frank would surely make him take the leap of faith and love and he would separate himself from Jane.

If he didn't, I might as well marry Frank and try to forget Joel although I knew that would be impossible. "No, this will work perfectly," I thought as Frank lifted my face and kissed me softly.

"You've made me a very happy man, Christy," Frank said trying to contain his emotions. "You've made me happy. I've waited a long time, looking for the right girl. And now I know I've found her."

My guilty feeling lasted only a short time. I could manage to let Frank down gently, without hurting his feelings when the time came. And what wrong was I doing in letting him have his moment of happiness, of joy? I was actually doing him a favor.

The next Monday at work, our engagement was all over the office. I suppose it couldn't be helped. Frank was so overjoyed he told everyone about our marriage plans. It would have been better and easier on him when I had to let him know about me and Joel if he had kept it to himself.

Good-naturedly I laughed and smiled with pride as the girls who worked with me teased me about being engaged. Inside, though, I was wishing it were Joel who had proposed instead of Frank.

I couldn't help feeling sorry for Mary Rathbone as the sea of well-wishers and congratulators washed around me. Mary sat at her desk, not succeeding very well in her attempt to hold back the tears in her eyes.

She gave me several hate-filled looks that said, "I know you don't love him, but I do."

Didn't love him

Yes, everyone in the office was well aware how much Mary loved Frank. All except Frank, that is, and it gave me a feeling of perverse pride that Frank, even though I didn't love him, had chosen me over her. But I tried to be nice to her that day.

It didn't take long for the news to reach Joel either and he was on the phone that very afternoon. Jane had probably heard it from someone and had taken great care to let her husband know.

"What the hell do you think you're doing?" Joel's voice sounded desperate and worried over the phone. "Have you given up on me so soon, Christy? Please don't marry that man. Please don't! I'll think of something and soon."

I had been right. By accepting Frank's proposal I had spurred Joel into action. I knew something would come of this. "I'm getting tired of waiting, Joel," I said honestly and bluntly. "I want someone to talk to me at night. Someone to hold me. You have Jane," I threw in maliciously, knowing it would cut him to the quick.

"That's not fair, Christy!" Joel moaned. "And you don't mean it. You're just using that man to get back at me. Don't you love me? I don't understand you at all. First you say you love me with all your heart and then you turn right around and accept some jerk's proposal of marriage."

As I listened to Joel's agonized voice I almost weakened and let him know I had planned it all just to upset him. But fortunately I didn't let myself give way.

"I'm just being pragmatic, Joel," I said calmly, hoping no one was listening to us. From the corner of my eye I caught sight of Frank. He was smiling at me.

"I want to have a little security while I'm chasing after you. After all, you're married and it doesn't seem to affect your love for me. Why shouldn't I be married too? It doesn't mean I love you any less, does it? You sleep with Jane and so there's no reason I shouldn't sleep with Frank — is there?"

"No! Look, we can't settle this over the phone. I have to see you, Christy," Joel groaned. I could sense his desperation over the phone.

Time with lover

"When? Where?" I said, and felt my blood rushing through my body at the thought of spending some time with my lover.

"Tonight. Can you be at your apartment . . . alone?"

"Yes, I can arrange that." My heart throbbed in my chest.

"Good. I'll be there, for sure. I love you, Christy. You can't go through with this. Goodbye, I'll see you tonight." Then Joel hung up the phone.

I spent the rest of the day wondering what Joel would have to say to me. Perhaps this would make him realize he had to get a divorce, and quick. Madame Ruby's spells making his life miserable and the possibility I might get married should be enough to pressure him into seeing the light. He had to give up Jane, pregnant or not, and soon.

"I can't bear the thought that you might belong to another man. I can't stand the thought of that pig and you going to bed together, honey," Joel was saying to me that night.

I could tell he was really worried about this and his hopes began to rise as he talked.

"That's what it means, if you two get married. You'll have to act like you love him and you'll hurt him terribly."

"But I already got out with him, Joel," I explained carefully, weighing my words so they would have the maximum effect. "You don't seem to mind that much, do you?"

Hint of anger

"I can't control your life. After all, you support yourself and I guess you can go out with whom you like," Joel said with a hint of anger in his voice. "But this is different. A lot different."

"How? Like I've pointed out, you're married, Joel. Why shouldn't I get married too?" I shot back at him.

"Well — because you love me. You do love me, don't you, Christy? I know it's been hard on you, but you ought to have some consideration for me, you know. My life isn't exactly easy, and as much as I want to . . ."

"Why shouldn't your life be easy? You've got her to take care of you, to wash your clothes, to fix your meals, to have your children and to go to sleep next to at night. And you have me whenever you want a change of pace."

"That's not fair! How many times do I have to apologize?" Joel's voice was flat with anger. "How many times do I have to apologize for marrying her?"

"You don't have to apologize. You've made your choice and now I guess I have to make mine, too. It's not what I want — I want to be your wife, Joel. Not his!"

"I want that, too! More than anything. Oh, if I could only go back and undo all the mess I've gotten us into. If only I could go back and straighten out that stupid argument we had. I can't even remember what it was about now. But one thing led to another, then I found myself in her arms and she was only too willing . . ."

"I don't want to hear it! What's done is done and no one can undo it." How many times had I wanted to do the same thing? Go back and forgive Joel for some ridiculous remark he had made a year ago.

Then he would be with me and I wouldn't have to be deceiving Frank and casting spells on Jane and browbeating Joel. But nothing could change what had already happened.

"What can I do? What can I do to make you change your mind? I know you love me and not him and that you're doing this only to hurt me. What can I do?"

"You can get a divorce, Joel," I said firmly.

"Yeah, I know. I've thought about it a hundred times. But . . ." Joel twisted his face into an uncertain frown. I'd never mentioned the subject before, but it was time now to play all my cards. If Joel didn't come through, and in a hurry, I'd find myself married to another man. And what scared me was that I wasn't sure I'd mind that much.

"But haven't you said she's becoming impossible to live with? Didn't you say she's driving you crazy?"

"Yeah, she is at that," Joel said, not disguising the fact he was glad we had changed the subject slightly. "I don't know. She's started doing things she never used to do before, you know? I mean, she's started to nag and complain and just act different in general. You know? It kind of worries me, but maybe it's just that she's pregnant."

"No, I don't know!" I snapped, getting irritated by Joel's concern for his wife. I knew the reason behind Jane's change, but I wasn't about to tell him. "You act as though you don't want to get a divorce . . . or be with me except to meet me every now and then and make love," I said, expressing the worst fears I felt.

"That's not true!" Joel erupted. "You know that's not the way I feel! I just don't see how I can divorce her now. That's all."

"What kind of argument is that? Why can't you divorce her now?" Things weren't going as I had imagined they would. Joel was almost saying he felt something for Jane and I would never be able to accept that.

"Because of the baby!" Joel said as if I ought to have known the reason and was stupid for asking. "I can't leave the two of them just when they need me the most. After all, Christy," Joel said softly. "I am the father of that child and I do have a responsibility to him."

"You'll have a responsibility the rest of your life if you look at it that way!" I wanted to say but kept my opinion to myself. What Joel was saying hurt me more than I had ever been hurt except when I saw him and Jane standing before the minister in the church.

"Joel, I can't go on like this. I love you too much not to have you for myself. I can't share you with someone else. Joel," I pleaded with him.

"I know. After the baby is born and I know everything is taken care of properly, well, then I'll work something out with her." Joel moved next to me and I felt his touch on my skin.

For a moment it made me feel cold and bitter. Even getting engaged hadn't made him see what he must do. By the time the baby was born and Joel made sure "Everything is properly taken care of" I would be married to Frank. Frank wouldn't wait forever and if I didn't marry him then the rumors would start flying, my pride would be dragged through the mud around town and I'd be a fool.

Shatter his marriage

No, I couldn't let that happen. As I melted into Joel's arms I determined to shatter his marriage somehow and soon. The only person I could think of was Madame Ruby. I recalled her words . . . "If you can get something close and adored by this woman . . . our spirit will work with much greater force . . ." I needed everything I could get my hands on to make sure Joel would be mine forever.

I had to bide my time before I could act. But something Joel had said made me confident I would succeed. The next week-end Joel and his wife were leaving on a trip they had planned. She wanted to visit her grandmother. I waited in my car the next Friday until I saw their car go past.

It infuriated me when I saw the two of them together. She was snuggled next to him and both of them were laughing. It made my heart hard and reaffirmed in my mind what I must do.

If I waited, I felt she would win Joel over to her completely and I would never have him. I waited until it had been dark an hour and then I slipped quietly out of my car. I walked up the sidewalk to the house and went to the door.

I knocked and waited as though I didn't know they had left. Anyone who was watching would assume I was a friend, not a burglar. I knocked again, and when no one answered, as I knew they wouldn't, I tried the doorknob. It was locked. I took a stiff plastic credit card from my pocket and slipped it into the crack between the door and the doorjamb.

Carefully, I worked it up and down until I had located the lock. Then I pushed firmly until I felt the lock give way. I pushed the door open and walked in as calmly as I could.

The house was dark and hollow as I made my way to their bedroom. When I saw the bed on which they had lain together and made love, it made me mad. Quickly, and with a guilty feeling, I slid open a dresser drawer.

It was filled with Joel's clothes. I continued my search until I found what I was looking for. As I picked through the slips and bras and panties, I knew I was looking for something special, something Jane adored and cared for.

I lifted a skimpy blue negligee out of a drawer, satisfied I had found what I was looking for.

"She probably seduces him every night in this," I thought angrily. "She really must prize this little goody." I crumpled up the negligee and stuffed it in my purse. I was closing the drawer when something else caught my eye.

It, too, was blue. But it wasn't skimpy or silk. It was the start of a knitted baby blanket, something she had spent a lot of time and love in making. I snatched it out and put back the negligee, satisfied this time I had found the one piece of cloth she adored the most. I checked my watch. I had to hurry, as Madame Ruby was waiting for me.

"So you've found something after all!" Madame Ruby eyed me curiously as she took the half-made blanket from me. "You never mentioned that the woman was pregnant. Did you?" She asked strangely as she led the way into the reading room.

"No, I didn't think it was of any importance," I said guiltily. "Is it?" I was amazed as I stood in the middle of the small room Madame Ruby used to give her readings. Instead of the usual white candles, stubby and almost completely burned away, stood tall, long, red sticks of thick wax.

They were glowing brightly, sending a harsh reddish light through the room. And a different incense was burning.

"Of no importance to me, surely. I simply do your bidding, Christine. For a small fee, of course. I simply do your bidding." Madame Ruby noticed my interest in the change of candles. "A very special night you have presented me, Christine. I shall need all my powers tonight. A very special night, indeed."

Madame Ruby sat down in a silk-covered chair. "You understand what you ask me to do, don't you?" Her face was a serious mass of wrinkles.

"I cannot control what these spirits may do to this woman who made this blanket. They may act viciously. They are uncommon spirits. They are devils, Christine."

"I want that woman out of the way," I snapped at Madame Ruby. I couldn't understand why she was being so cautious at this stage of the game. Hadn't she gone along willingly before and hadn't it been her own suggestion about casting spells on Jane?

"As you wish, Christine," the madame said with a sly smile. "I must tell you beforehand that this will be unlike anything you have seen me do before. For this I will need all of my energy and yours, too. You must help me in this. You must concentrate on calling up the great evil spirits to our aid."

"I will." Already my voice was turning shaky as the madame went into her trance. As she began to mumble strange words I had never heard before, I tried to concentrate. I felt my skin grow clammy and a pang of doubt ran through me. But I ignored it and devoted my energies to summoning the spirits. I wanted Joel for myself. I wanted Jane out of the way so my love and I could be free to be together. I didn't care what I had to go through to get that.

"You're looking kind of sad tonight, honey," Frank said casually later that night at my apartment. "Something bothering you? Are you feeling all right?"

"Sure," I said, but inside I wasn't so sure. Had I really seen that hovering, horrible form hanging over Madame Ruby or not?

It must have been my imagination, I told myself again. Yet I had called Frank and invited him over for a late night snack because I didn't want to be alone on this night of all nights. "Do you want some more spaghetti?"

"No, I've had more than enough." Frank smiled at me warmly. A slight shudder went through me when I thought of how I would have to dump him.

Frank was a good man who had been very nice to me and I didn't want to hurt him unless I had to. "Have you decided on a date yet?" he asked in a serious tone. "I don't want to put it off forever, do you?" He laughed at that but I could only manage a smile.

"Hardly. I don't know though, honey..." I forced myself to use the word. "It's such a big step for a girl and I need to get myself organized."

"You take all the time you need, Christy," Frank took my hand in his. "All I want is for you to be happy. Are you sure you're feeling all right, though?" Frank asked again.

No, I wasn't sure at all. Since the time I had walked out of Madame Ruby's house I had felt sick to my stomach and my head hurt. All the time I was thinking about Joel. I had done it. I was making it possible for the two of us to be together.

I felt I should be happy at the prospect, but something held me back. A vague fear I had done something horrible nagged at me. I tried to cast it aside, but I couldn't rid myself of it.

Last horrid shrieks

Looking at my watch, I was shocked to see how late it was. Joel and Jane should have arrived at her grandmother's by now and I would have to wait another couple of days before I could expect anything to happen. Suddenly the Madame's last horrid shrieks exploded through my brain and then I heard the phone ringing.

As Frank gave me a curious look, I felt the blood drain from my face. I picked up the receiver.

"Christy! Is that you, Christy?" It was Joel and his voice sounded strained.

"Yes, it's me," I answered, not wanting Frank to know who was on the other end of the line. "What is it?"

"I've got to see you. I have to see your face. I need someone. I need you!" There was no mistaking the desperation in his voice.

"What happened, Joel?" I said, forgetting in my anxiety that the man I was engaged to was sitting only a few feet from me.

"Oh, it was terrible. We had a wreck ... the car just seemed to jump out of control and the next thing I knew we were lying upside down in a ditch. She's hurt, Christy. Hurt bad! She may not make it through the night, and the baby may be dead. Oh, I need you now, Christy — more than ever. I'm at Bernsville Hospital."

"I'll be right there, honey." I hung up the phone and jumped up to get my coat. It was then I saw Frank standing in the middle of the living room, his face a mask of anger, that I realized he had been listening all along.

"Christy," he said, trying to control his voice. "Who was that?"

I lied

"No one," I lied, thinking only that Joel needed me. It was a two-hour drive to Bernsville and I had to hurry so I could be by my lover's side and comfort him.

"No one? I want an explanation — I think I deserve an explanation. Who is it you call 'honey'?" Frank asked. I think he knew what was happening but wanted to hear it from me to make absolutely sure.

"Joel Cory. That's who I called honey, Frank. And Joel is the man I love," I said sharply, knowing it was no time to be tactful. Frank's face fell. "I'm sorry, Frank," I added when I saw his mournful look.

"All along I've been playing the fool," he muttered to himself. "Mary told me. Mary warned me, but I thought it was only out of jealousy. If I'd only listened to her ..."

"I'm leaving now. Could you lock the door when you go?" I said coldly and left the man who loved me standing in my apartment alone.

Two hours doesn't seem like much, but it is when your mind is burdened by guilt and your heart is leaping with happiness at the same time. I kept recalling Madame Ruby's words — "anything can happen" — as I sped toward Bernsville and the waiting arms of my lover. The closer I got to Joel, the better I felt. I told myself it wasn't a spell at all, that all the stuff about witchcraft and spirits was nothing but fairy tales and that the wreck had nothing to do with the devil. I had convinced myself by the time I finally reached Bernsville.

Joel was standing in the hospital's waiting room looking strangely dejected when I arrived. Perhaps he was simply play-acting, trying to cover his own happiness. Jane was dead. Of that I was sure.

"No, she's still alive!" Joel said with a shocked voice when I told him how sorry I felt for him, losing his wife. "I pray she doesn't die, too." His words stung me. then it struck me that he wasn't play-acting at all.

"It's our only chance though! With her out of the picture we'll be free, Joel," I whispered frantically. "I've worked so hard for this ..." I heard myself blurt out. My visits to Madame Ruby, I had thought, would remain a secret known only by myself and the spirit woman, now I had told my lover! What would he think?

"Worked so hard for what? What's our only chance? That Jane dies? You've worked for that! Oh, I don't know what's happening any more! When I see you, I love you. Yet when I'm with her I love her. Why did I even call you up and have you drive so far just to console me?"

"You what? You love her?" My voice was cold with anger.

"Sometimes. Don't look like that at me, Christy. I've tried to help myself, but whenever I see her and realize she's carrying my child ... well, a man can't help but love a woman who's going to have his baby. But I love you, too." Joel shrugged his shoulders in desperation.

"I don't know how to explain it. I can't get a divorce, yet I can't give you up either. You'll just have to be content with that, Christy. Other women have done it for men they love."

Never be mistress

"I'll never be your mistress, Joel. You'll have to decide which of us you want. You can't have both of us," I said, trying to keep myself from becoming hysterical. Suddenly it was all too clear to me. Joel had never grown up.

His ego wanted to be satisfied by having two women who loved him and he would never give up Jane because of that and the baby. Never. I knew it.

"I hope she dies!" I spit out at him, wanting to hurt him like he had just hurt me. "I hope she dies — and I hope the baby she's carrying for you dies, too!"

"Christy! Don't say that. You don't know what a kind and patient woman she is. You don't mean that, Christy. I know you don't!" Joel tried to touch me, but I shoved his hand away from me.

"I do mean it — see?" I pulled the little blue baby blanket out of my purse. "Wh-where — how'd you get that?" Joel stared at the piece of cloth and then snatched it out of my hands. "She was making that. How did you get it? What for?"

"I got it so a witch could get that woman out of our way, Joel. I did it for us!" I said frantically, hoping Joel would see how much I adored him and needed him for myself.

Shook his head

"You — you . . . !" Joel shook his head and began to walk away from me.

"Joel! Joel! I love you! Come with me! Leave her, Joel and come with me!" I pleaded, fearing he would walk out of my life forever. Couldn't he see what I had gone through to get him? Couldn't he see that if he didn't want me now everything was lost for me?

"How can I come with you?" Joel said bitterly. "How can I leave her when she's fighting for her life and for my child's, too? No! I have a duty to them. I've already failed so miserably. Go away!" he said, but I was already leaving. I could see I had played the game and lost.

As I drove slowly back to Riversburg, I didn't fight to hold back my tears. I had lost everything — Joel, Frank, and even my self-respect. There was nothing for me now, not back there. Riversburg would hold only painful memories for me.

I would always be seeing Joel and the bitterness, the hatred, and the love in his eyes. How would I ever face Frank again, after having done what I did to him? And how could I ever see the white house Madame Ruby lived in without realizing I was the cause of Jane's horrible condition?

I prayed as I drove that she would be all right, that the baby she had in her would live and be normal. I prayed Joel would find happiness with her and that he would forget I ever existed. I prayed Frank could find in Mary what he had sought in me.

For myself, there was a lot I had to face. There was much I had to cleanse myself of, much wickedness I had to get rid of. I could never do that in Riversburg.

Selfish love

When I came to the fork in the road I turned away from the town I had spent my life in. What I needed now was a new life, and time to regain all I had thrown away in my selfish love for a married man; time to forgive myself for what I'd done to Frank and to Jane and to an innocent unborn child.

I would call my parents in the morning and tell them I was going to be living in Denver a while and as I drove toward that faraway city, I prayed to God He could find it in His grace to forgive a woman who had walked hand in hand with the devil.

FORCED INTO SEX WITH MY MOTHER'S PIMP

fell for a moment, and then she slapped my face. "Oh, baby," she cried, "what have I done to you?"

I rushed into her arms boo-hooing all the way. I wanted to ask her for advice. I wanted her to tell me what to do. Even in my distraught condition, I knew I was still the stronger of the two of us. My mother needed Ace for the heroin he shot into her arms. "Mama," I asked desperately, "what should I do?"

"Baby, I don't know. I'll fix that Ace Charles! Just wait until I see him! He'll get no more money from me!"

"Mama, does that mean you're going to stop shooting that stuff into your veins?" I knew even as I asked that Mama would not stop. I had tried too many years to get her to give it up and go to a hospital. She promised but ended up doing nothing more than promising.

While Mama was assuring me she was going to stop drugs this time and have nothing to do with Ace, Mama Carrie came in. I repeated to her the entire incident. "All right, child, get your clothes together. You're moving over to my place right now! Don't argue, just get them together."

"Wh-what will I do without Nadine?" Mama pleaded. "You can't take my child away. I just told her I'm through with the old life. I've changed, Mama."

"Won't do you any good to talk that mess to me," Mama Carrie said stoutly. "Nadine, your mother is hopeless. You can come back to see her when she goes to the hospital, not before. I blame myself for this mess. I should have taken you out of here long ago. Your mother ain't nothing but a dishonest old fool."

I had never left Mama before, even though Mama Carrie had tried to get me to come live with her. Now I was fed up. I had been used in the worst imaginable way. I started throwing my clothing on the bed. Mama threw herself on me crying and telling me she was sorry.

She begged me to stay with her. She insisted she would die without me. I started crying again, and Mama Carrie swore.

"Mama Carrie, I can't leave her like this. After what Ace did to me, she will have to stop living the way she does. I'll help her to work it out," I cried. Mama Carrie was having none of that. She insisted I leave. I had never seen Mama Carrie so angry. She even started packing my clothing herself. She roughly pushed Mama away. My grandmother shoved a bag of clothes in my hand and roughly pulled me out the door.

Might commit suicide

Mama tried to follow us, but Mama Carrie ordered her back inside in a no-nonsense manner. She would not take no for an answer. Mama returned home, but my heart went with her. I was afraid she might commit suicide. We hadn't gone a block before we ran into Clarence. I had thought Mama Carrie was furious, but Clarence was so angry I could practically see the steam.

"Are you okay, baby?" he managed. "Are you hurt in any way?"

"Son, you take her to the hospital to be checked over, and then bring her back to my apartment. No matter what she says, you bring her back to my house. Now help me get these clothes up to my place. Don't just stand there looking like a fool," Mama Carrie said.

During the trip to and from the hospital, Clarence kept telling me what he was going to do to Ace Charles. What it all boiled down to was that he was going to mess Ace Charles up something awful. He was so furious and sorry for me I thought he was going to cry.

Looking back on the entire scene, I now feel I should have talked Clarence out of his plans. At the time, I was too angry to try to stop him. I wanted Ace dead. I wanted him out of the way for what he had done to me and I wanted my mother free of him. At least we had to explain to the police what had happened. They promised to issue an all-points bulletin for Ace. I promised to testify against him.

Clarence left me at Mama Carrie's and left looking for Ace. I was beginning to worry about Clarence. Ace not only had a knife, but he was known to go around with a pistol. The next morning I begged off from going to school. With her rare kind of understanding, my grandmother allowed me to stay in bed.

Stark terror

In the afternoon I got up and went to see my mother. Mama Carrie had long since gone to work. Mama hadn't committed suicide as I feared, but she was practically climbing the walls. Twice a day Ace had been giving her heroin. Mama said Ace had been over and had refused to help her. "Baby, baby," she whimpered, "you've got to tell the police Ace didn't rape you so he'll give me the stuff."

"Mama, if you love me, you'll go to the hospital," I argued.

"No, baby. I'd die in that place. They won't give me anything. My heart is too weak to take that kind of beating. Please, baby, please."

Mama was sweating, crying, and banging on the walls. Only if one has seen a person go through withdrawal does one begin to appreciate the stark terror. It was worse by far than a thousand toothaches to look at Mama.

I loved her dearly and wanted to be the one to absorb the pain she was going through. The point is I could not stand to see Mama the way she existed and suffered.

I stayed with her for hours applying cold compresses to her face. We pretended not to be in when Mama Carrie came around that evening. We simply refused to answer the door.

Several times Mama tried to go into the streets to look for Ace, but I managed to keep her inside. It was becoming a losing battle; soon Mama would escape by force. I really didn't know which of us was being tortured the most.

Shortly after dark, Mama answered the telephone. Ace called to see whether she had convinced me to drop the charges against him. In her desperation, she lied to get Ace to come over with the dope. I threw my arms up in frustration and horror. This was really too much for me to handle. I turned on Mama and forgot all about her suffering.

"Mama, how could you? He raped me — your own daughter!" Mama just fell out on the bed moaning and groaning. Not knowing what else to do, I called Clarence and found him at home.

Before I could finish telling the story, Clarence was off the phone and on his way. Fear began to creep up on me from all directions. I was beginning to see myself as the center of a coming explosion.

Thinking didn't come easy with Mama climbing the walls, but I was trying to think as I had never thought before. Suddenly, it seemed I had been doing everything wrong for sometime. I was flooded with regrets. My head was beginning to hurt. When finally there was a knock on the door, I had begun to suspect I should have had Mama admitted to the hospital long ago.

Mama stumbled to the door and admitted Ace. He walked in with a leer. Mama started begging, but Ace hadn't taken his eyes off me since he walked in. "Did you tell the police I didn't rape you?" Ace demanded.

"Are you kidding?" I blurted, angrily. "I hope they hang you! I hope they lock you up and melt down the key, you stinking, rotten beast! Preying on my mother and then having the nerve to try to make me like you! I hate you more than anyone I have ever known!"

He pushed me up against the wall and slapped me, but I deflected the blow. This made him more angry than ever. He picked me up and threw me on the bed. Before I could do more than scratch him, he had ripped off my panties. Mama was trying to grab Ace while begging for the dope.

"Ace, darling, give me the stuff! I'll do anything you say!" Mama was yelling.

"Hold your daughter's legs a few minutes and then I'll give you the smack," Ace assured Mama.

Mama held my legs while pleading with Ace to hurry and give her the stuff. He kept telling her to keep holding my legs and she would get the smack. Ace then attempted to rape me while I twisted and screamed. After several minutes of my twisting and getting slapped, there was a resounding crash.

I looked up to see Clarence standing over the tableau of Mama holding my legs while Ace appeared to have been engaging successfully in a sexual act with me.

I had time to notice a hurt expression in Clarence's eyes. In the next moment, he was all over Ace, his fists moving like pistons. Mama started pulling on Clarence until he roughly shoved her to the floor.

I started to phone for the police only to discover two policemen advancing rapidly through the door. After disengaging Clarence from Ace, they attempted to handcuff both men. Furiously, I explained the true situation and reminded them they had out an APB on Ace.

Mother is a junkie

Not content with my explanation, Clarence had to butt in with his unneeded two cents worth of meddling. "Her mother here is a junkie. She was holding her daughter down while this creep was raping her," Clarence said.

"Clarence, what are you saying?" I asked, shocked. "What are you trying to do to Mama?"

"Your mother needs to be put away. Anytime a mother will hold her own daughter's legs like that, she has no business being on the streets!" he said. "Officers," he continued, "if you search that man you'll undoubtedly find heroin. If you search this house you'll find the makings for shooting heroin. Look at her arm, there must be at least a thousand needle marks there."

"Is it true your mother was holding you while this man raped you?" the officer asked.

"Yes," I admitted, "but he was only trying. He didn't succeed this time. Clarence came in before he was actually raping me."

"Then we'll have to take her to jail also. If what this young man intimates is true, she'll be better off."

Mama tried to clutch me, screaming for me not to let them take her. She kept insisting it would kill her. With a sick desperation, I watched helplessly while they carried Mama off to jail. If I could have killed Clarence with a look, he would have dropped dead on the spot.

We had the first fight of our short career, with me blaming him for having

Result of the newest scientific research - the Magnetic Jewels Pendant MICRON 3 can actually change even a worthless life into an oasis of bliss!

"...You'll literally be overrolled by a true avalanche of joyous happenings!"

Here is what Mrs. Paula C. from O., a schoolteacher, writes: "I feel obliged to thank you cordially for the MICRON 3. Since I've been wearing it I'm being literally overrolled by a true avalanche of joyous happenings! I scarcely had hung it about my neck when I won a handsome sum in a lottery. And that's not all! A few hours before writing this letter I was promoted and have now a much better paid position! The true miracle though is my new life-attitude! Until then I was nearly always depressed and tense. Now I am able to do my work in peace and contentment. I am in good humor and self-confident. There is the fact, that the MICRON 3 is a very attractive. My acquaintances say I have very good taste. Again thank you very much!"

This letter is from a school teacher and now we all know that schoolteachers are neither superstitious nor primitive. A schoolteacher must be well-prepared to bring up young people, not seldom an ungrateful task, but nevertheless a wonderful work! Yet it needs healthy nerves and psychic balance. The saying of such people must be true and authentic. Such sayings are based upon facts.

Do you still sleepless? Certainly no more and no less than this agent from Lyon, who because of an accident could not visit his customers for a few months. Morally and economically defeated he let himself be convinced by his wife to wear the MICRON 3 about his neck. Previously he had named the pendant a medieval amulet for fools. Here is what this skeptic writes: "...after a long period of misfortune, I now look ahead hopefully to the future. The MICRON 3 has saved me from a desperate situation!"

Don't you yet believe?

Perhaps like this agent (Giorgio T., age 35, from ...)? Only after a sking accident he let himself be convinced by his assistant wife to wear the MICRON 3. But do read yourself what he wrote after a few weeks: "...After a frivolous sking accident I was forced to wear the MICRON 3, much against my own volition. I was actually out-manoeuvred. Day and night I thought about my wife and about my customers who now turned to my competition. A true disaster! It was my wife who almost forced me to wear the MICRON 3. Naturally I did not believe in its benefitting strength. But what seemed impossible happened. I felt like newborn and have since resumed my activities with an enthusiasm never known before! Furthermore my abilities and my mind for business seem to have tripled! And of course with delightful success! My family is very content again and I spend them all like never before! And to you, I will be ever thankful! Do wear this wonderful ornament and you will see. You will be surprised by a true series of joyous happenings."

● If you never were a lucky fellow up to this you can now expect a prize in a lottery or in other games of chance! ● If you are lonely and if you long for love and warmth you too will soon find the unexpected encounters which will fill out your leisure time and life. May it be love, may it be true friendship.

● If your financial position has not been rising up to now, if you never were able to fulfill your wishes, from now on you will always, due by a miracle seem all favorable opportunities! You will earn more appreciation! You will obtain a better position! Better pay! Work up to your talents!

How does the Micron 3 Work?

The outer characteristic - Gold-plated with a little Bijou-chain. A real fascinating ornament. The real mystery lies inside of the MICRON 3. A selection of the best magnetized metals that make the MICRON 3 an enormously strong field of magnetic waves. These waves create through their movements a magnetic field around your body. Thus you are able to keep away the negative influences and to attract the good ones for which you will develop a readiness of acceptance. Love and good fortune will be your everlasting companions.

The most modern scientific theories, the opinions of worldwide known experts in the area of magnetism agree without exception on the existence of magnetic forces and their influence on people in general!

Do wear the fascinating adornment (gold-plated) for 1 month without risking ONE CENT! That is our unique offer. Yes, you have read right! You can wear the MICRON 3 for 1 month, if you want!

IMITATION SPANISH FLY & GINSENG

Do You Measure Up? You Can. Unbelievable in Their Effect.

Ginseng is a plant which is chiefly grown in the Far East, especially in China. The Chinese have used it as an aphrodisiac for over 1,000 years. Ginseng has recently been introduced into the United States and is very popular. Legendary writings say Ginseng is highly effective in awakening and producing sexual desires in men and women alike. We have added our imitation Spanish Fly to the Ginseng to make it work faster and longer. We have also made it easier and more pleasant to take now. In a capsule. We are making it available to you, the public, at a price you can afford. If you need Ginseng you cannot afford to be without it. Ginseng is sometimes called "The Turn-On Root". To quote S. Steingold: "... if you think you have been turned on before you ain't seen nothing yet!" Try our Ginseng with Imitation Spanish Fly Capsules and find out what he means. Can be emptied and mixed into any drink.

my mother arrested. He accused me of being involved in another sexual act with Ace out of stupidity.

"You had no business coming back here. You must be either a glutton for punishment, or you enjoy having sex with Ace," he accused.

That was too much for me to handle, so I ordered him out. Alone now and feeling empty, I locked up and dragged myself over to Mama Carrie's and brought her up to date on the happenings.

Prison hospital

I even told her how stupidly Clarence had acted. "No matter what happens to your mother, she will be better off," Mama Carrie replied. "Remember, child, your mother is my daughter and I still love her. Your friend, Clarence, or whatever your boy friend's name is, is right. He got angry with your mother for holding you down because he loves you."

"He's not my boy friend, Mama Carrie. I hate him." My words were to come back and haunt me in the coming months. Clarence and I went without speaking during the last month of school. I pointedly ignored him in school. Sometimes he looked wistfully at me, but he didn't speak either.

Mama was sent to a prison hospital. She neither died nor committed suicide. My mother is finally looking like the mother I once knew. She's gaining weight and looking rosier. I spent the few months after graduation concerning myself with Mama. I prayed she would not go back on heroin. In fact, she hasn't even gone back to prostitution.

Clarence had always been underfoot since we were in junior high. I expected him to come back to me any day until I learned he had gone into the Army. It was then I really panicked. Just when everything was looking up, he had to go out of my life. I had never really missed him until he left.

Mama was now out of jail and out of the hospital. She joined Synanon and was making great progress toward recovery. She was even happy, but I couldn't join her in her happiness. "Why is my life so miserable, Mama Carrie?" I grumbled one afternoon.

"Child, you go to his mother's and get his address and write him. You will at least know how he feels. You young people don't know enough to get in out of the rain. You are being stubborn for nothing."

"But Mama Carrie, he hates me. He thinks I went back to the house knowing I would run into Ace again. He's jealous that Ace was the first to — to, you know ... even though it was rape," I explained. "Besides, Mama Carrie, I never really indicated I even liked him. I was always telling him to get lost."

"Child, you go over to his mother's house and get his address before I take a stick to your behind! You been mooning around here now for a half year. Now get going!"

On my way to his house, I decided she was right. At least I would know one way or the other whether he loved me. My heart was pounding when I reached his house. I hoped his mother would give me his address. Well, I guess you can imagine my surprise when the door opened and the big, grinning, beautiful man stood before me, in his uniform.

"Nadine," he whispered. "Nadine, I was just coming over to your house to invite you out for a movie. Listen, don't refuse me yet. I only want to date you and be friends until maybe one day you'll begin to see I never meant you harm. I acted out of a desperate love. Now, will you forgive me for what I did to your mother and give me a chance?"

"Clarence — oh, Clarence, I missed you, you big idiot!" I blabbed, crying. I fell into his arms while he picked me up tenderly and took me inside to inform his mother she was looking at her future daughter-in-law.

DOCTORS TALK ABOUT LIFE AFTER DEATH

By ROBERT DARBY

The subject of life after death has occupied mankind from the very beginning of time. Even so-called savages who never heard of the Bible and Jesus Christ have had some kind of Supreme Being and a conception of sorts of some kind of life in the hereafter.

Their ideas of what life after death or "Heaven," is like varies, of course, from our own, but the idea was and is there.

But this is the age of science. A good many people no longer accept the teachings of the Bible on faith. They demand proof. The idea of "Heaven" and "Hell" is being debated more and more.

But just at the time when skeptics are more and more demanding "proof" before accepting religion, the leading practitioners of science, medical doctors, are more and more investigating the idea of life after death. Some are still skeptical, but more and more they're beginning to question their skepticism.

A case in point is this story of a woman who actually "died" but was brought back to life. This is her story:

"It happened during the birth of my first child. Mine was a difficult delivery and I had lost a lot of blood. Suddenly I had the feeling I was floating out of my body, up toward the ceiling.

"I looked down and saw the doctors and nurses frantically trying to detect a pulse or sign that I was breathing. I was dead. At the same time I began to hear a strange ringing noise and felt myself being whisked through a long, dark tunnel.

"I saw a warm, glowing light unlike anything I'd ever seen before. All around me were relatives and friends who had already died.

"Then the 'light' asked me questions about how my life had been, and, almost in an instant, I saw the whole of it flash by, clear and in perfect detail.

"I felt so happy . . . I wasn't afraid at all. But then, all of a sudden, I was in my body and conscious, with my doctor standing over me telling me how they thought they had lost me. I started to tell him what I had seen, but I couldn't seem to find the right words. Besides, I was afraid he'd think I was crazy. But I'll never forget it. It was beautiful."

That's one woman's story of how it feels to "die." It may sound like something out of a science fiction novel, but it isn't. It's the true experience of a woman who, by all medical standards, was considered dead but who was resuscitated through modern medical techniques.

This bringing "dead" people back to life is something that is happening more and more. In the last 10 years thousands of patients have described similar experiences. As a result, doctors and men of science who might have scoffed at the idea 10 years ago are now seriously investigating life after death.

JACK BENNY'S VISION

There is the case of the well-known comedian, Jack Benny, who died of cancer of the pancreas in 1974. Benny dramatically lost his fear of death when a former vaudeville partner, Lyman Woods, who had been dead 45 years, appeared to the dying comedian and gave him a glimpse into a beautiful life beyond the grave. One day just before Benny died, he whispered to his aide, Eddie Villery: "I just saw Lyman Woods and spoke to him. He is going to help me through. He showed me the way . . . and it's beautiful."

Villery was the late comedian's confidant during the five years before Benny's death. But Woods had been dead almost 45 years. He and Benny were vaudeville partners from 1912 to 1917.

"Jack had a terrible fear of death," Villery said. "He became melancholy and deeply depressed when he heard of friends dying or even being ill. He feared death because, as he used to tell me, there was nothing after death — no family, no friends, no laughs and no audiences — just a big, black void."

Villery was Benny's chauffeur, valet, jack-of-all-trades and also a close friend, according to another Benny friend, George Burns.

Villery was in constant attendance to Benny during the latter's last days. Under heavy sedation to ease the pain of the cancer, Benny kept repeating a name from the past, Lyman Woods.

"The repetition of the name puzzled me," Villery said. "There was such a strange tone in his voice."

"Who is Lyman Woods?" I asked. Jack didn't answer, but several hours later he mentioned the name again. Then Jack whispered "Didn't you see him?"

"There was a momentary silence, and suddenly Jack's pain-ridden face took on a look of pleasure. He opened his eyes and told me he'd just seen Lyman and spoken to him. Jack said Lyman was going to help him through to a beautiful hereafter."

Villery later learned Woods was a musician who had been Benny's vaudeville partner from 1912 to 1917.

Shortly before Benny died, the name Lyman Woods came again to the comedian's lips. Says Villery: "At first his voice was indistinct, then he began to speak more clearly. 'I was with Lyman. He told me it was beautiful . . . and it was . . . it was.'"

FEAR OF 'INSTANT END'

"The significance of what Jack was saying began to dawn on me. As he was nearing death his old and good friend Lyman Woods was helping him make the transition from life to death. He was guiding him home, helping dispel Jack's lifelong fear of that "instant end" he talked about.

"Through his deathbed vision, Jack at the very end discovered it was not a still, silent void of blackness he was entering, but a beautiful place to which he was being led by his old and dear friend of long ago."

Many religions, probably most, accept immortality as a matter of faith. What is different about the current studies is the attempt to provide scientific evidence for the survival of some element of personal individuality — the "mind" if not the "soul" — after the body dies.

Dr. Raymond A. Moody Jr. is a physician and resident in psychology who also has a degree in philosophy. He is author of a book which compiles 50 case histories in which persons who have "died" and been revived relate their "after death" experiences.

Case histories prove to doctors theory of life after death

In the last 10 years Dr. Moody has collected so many stories like the woman mentioned earlier he has stopped counting them. His conclusion: "I'm tempted to say flatly, 'yes, there is life after death'."

He doesn't consider the accounts of life after death he collected scientific proof, but it is his feeling, based on these observations, that after death the mind continues to live on a level of existence unlike our day-to-day reality but with characteristics that appear to be universal and that occur to men and women equally and to young and old alike, regardless of background or religious upbringing.

Although no two "life after death" experiences were related in exactly the same way, Dr. Moody noted 15 separate elements that cropped up again and again, including moving through a dark tunnel, floating out of the body, meeting a being of light (also called the "take-away" figure by other researchers), greeting other dead people, seeing one's life pass in review and having difficulty describing the experience.

Dr. Moody's findings coincide with the research being done by Dr. Elisabeth Kubler-Ross, a psychiatrist widely known for her work with the dying. Dr. Kubler-Ross says the terminally ill and those who have been brought back from death often describe the same sensations, including the same floating out of their bodies, a feeling of peace and other sensations described by Dr. Moody. Says she: "Most were also aware of a take-away figure who helped them in their transition to another plane of existence and were greeted by loved ones who had died before them." Based on evidence uncovered in her work, Dr. Kubler-Ross is convinced there is life after death.

VISIONS CAUSED BY DRUGS

There are critics, of course. Some think other explanations can be found for the phenomena reported by Dr. Kubler-Ross, Dr. Moody and others. They ask questions like these: Are the visions described simply hallucinations caused by drugs or extreme illness? Isn't it likely people see what and who they want in their visions as a way of removing fears and worries? Are such experiences truly universal? Do persons of different cultural and religious backgrounds share similar reactions?

To find answers to such questions, Dr. Karlis Osis, director of research at New York's American Society for Physical Research and a Chester F. Carlson research fellow, initiated three separate studies (two in this country and one in India). Doctors and nurses totaling 2,000 were questioned. Information gathered from these studies included:

1. Heavily sedated patients and those taking drugs known to produce hallucinations were less likely to have encounters with the after-life than those who took no medication at all. Furthermore, drug-induced hallucinations pertained to concerns of this world, not visions of another world or realm of existence.

2. Patients suffering from illnesses known to alter consciousness and produce hallucinations (brain damage, uremic poisoning, etc.) saw fewer "take-away" figures than did their lucid counterparts.

3. Patients did not necessarily "see" what they wanted to see. For instance, visions of the after-life were not consistent with their known preconceived ideas, if any, of "Heaven." (Nor were recent events the ones most often recalled, as might be expected).

4. Visions appeared as frequently to patients who had every expectation to recover as to those who knew they were dying. Thus, wishful thinking did not appear to be a factor in determining whether a patient would have a life-after-death experience.

5. Differences in culture and religion didn't make any great difference in the nature of the experience. Dying patients both in this country and in India often claimed to see the "take-away" figure.

Some of Dr. Osis' findings have been borne out by other researchers. Dr. Charles A. Garfield, assistant clinical professor of psychology and research psychologist at the University of California Medical Center's Cancer Research Institute in San Francisco says that in his experience, "the whole quality of life-after-death visions is entirely different from drug-induced hallucinations or the type dissociative patients in a great deal of pain may experience."

Dissociation is what, for instance, marathon runners experience when they literally "separate" themselves from their intense pain in order to continue the race. To Dr. Garfield, these patients do seem to have glimpsed

Medical profession interest grows, research to find proof being explored

another level of existence. "We have been forced to accept things that seemed at the time more ridiculous than this," he says. "...that the earth is round, for example."

Despite all this, many members of the scientific community remain skeptical. Dr. Russell Noyes Jr., professor of psychiatry at the University of Iowa College of Medicine and head of a recent study that observed more than 100 near-death experiences feels it's too early to conclude there is life after death.

He says it's important to keep in mind after-life visions also occur to people in sudden, frightening situations — such as automobile accidents — that make them think they are about to die.

In Noyes' opinion, the experience may, instead, offer insights into how the mind reacts when death seems imminent. For instance, the sensation of the mind floating out of the body might be explained as a last-ditch attempt by the mind to pretend death is not real, that one is watching it as a spectator.

The panoramic flashbacks, he says, may result when the mind, faced with the prospect of death, focuses on the past.

Others believe the interest in life after death is nothing more than a fad — last year it was exorcism, this year it's life after death.

Claims of life after death will remain groundless until they can be approved by accepted scientific standards in the view of some.

What is really at issue is the definition of "death." Doctors maintain those who are resuscitated are not dead until there is brain death. Said one doctor: "Subjective testimony in itself does not constitute adequate scientific proof."

Providing the kind of absolute proof demanded by the skeptics is difficult to come by since current scientific research methods don't really work for this kind of investigation.

Nevertheless, interest in the subject among members of the medical profession continues to grow, and new avenues of research are being explored.

MYSTERIES REMAIN MYSTERIES

"The physical, materialistic approach of scientists today may be as inadequate when dealing with matters of the mind as Sir Isaac Newton's Law of Physics — which works fine here on earth — would be if you applied them to the stars," one researcher put it.

So there it dangles, this question of life after death. Some say yes, others no. Some of the Creator's mysteries remain mysteries. But the subject is not being dismissed out of hand as it once was. Doubt is growing. Putting a man on the moon once was laughable. It couldn't be done, but it was.

The human mind, to this point in history, has been one of the biggest mysteries of all. The world's experts know little about it, but they're learning. Perhaps one of these days we will know for certain about life after death — scientifically speaking.

MY DEAD BOYFRIEND LEFT ME PREGNANT

where I was lying. A long time later I thought I heard a baby cry, but I couldn't be sure. I was in a strange dream world where I couldn't be sure of anything.

When I awoke, bright streamers of sunlight flooded the room and Doris was nowhere around. My body was so sore and aching I could hardly move. It seemed like hours I lay there before Doris came into the room and I could ask her where my baby was.

"Your baby was born dead," she said shortly.

I turned my face to the wall and began to cry. After all these months of torture and heartache, waiting for the day I could hold my baby in my arms, I was being denied even that happiness.

There's no way to describe the bitterness and terrible hatred I felt toward Doris during those next weeks. I was certain if she'd taken me to a hospital the way I'd begged her to, my baby would have lived.

I was free to do anything I wanted now, of course, since my pregnancy had come to an end. And every day I'd leave the house to go to the park or even to sit in some bowling alley for a few hours, anywhere at all so I wouldn't have to be around Doris.

One day as I was returning home I ran into one of our neighbors - a thin, plain-featured woman by the name of Mrs. Ashton. I felt a sharp burst of pain when I saw the baby carriage she was wheeling along the sidewalk. Yet I knew how long the Ashtons had been waiting for the adoption agency to give them a baby and how happy Mrs. Ashton must be now that she finally had one.

I smiled at her. "What did you get, Mrs. Ashton?" I asked. "A boy or a girl?"

She gave me a sharp, unfriendly look. "A boy!"

Tears smarted in my eyes as I stared down into the carriage. "Do you mind if I take a look at him?"

I'd moved the soft blanket down only an inch or two when my hand was brushed aside and Mrs. Ashton quickly covered the baby's face. "He's sleeping right now." She gave me a strange, flustered look. "I don't want him disturbed."

She was gone in a flash, without another word or a backward glance, wheeling the carriage up the street as if she couldn't get away from me fast enough. I knew as surely as I stood there that Mrs. Ashton hadn't received her baby from an adoption agency.

It was my baby in that carriage. There wasn't a single doubt in my mind. Mrs. Ashton's whole manner confirmed my suspicions.

What was I going to do? Who would I turn to for help? Should I go to the police?

Suddenly I thought of Miss Mathis, the only real friend I had. She was the one person who could help me decide what to do.

Burst into tears

There was an expression of happy surprise on her face when she opened the door to find me standing on her front porch. "Sharon!" she exclaimed, drawing me inside. "I've thought about you so often - wondered whatever happened to you. Why did you drop out of school?"

"It - it's such a long story," I choked. "So many things have happened. I want to tell you about it, Miss Mathis, but I don't know where to begin..." My voice caught as I burst into tears.

Instantly Miss Mathis had her arms around me, murmuring words of comfort, as she led me to her living room couch. Then, between choking sobs, I was pouring it all out, telling her everything. How happy I'd been when I found out I was pregnant, because I'd loved Travis so much and was really glad I was going to have his baby, except that my pregnancy was turned into a growing nightmare by my stepmother.

I told her about some of the things

Doris had done — about being locked in my room most of the time and that, in the end, Doris had even kept me at home so she could deliver the baby herself.

Shaken by a fresh onslaught of tears, I began, haltingly, to relate what I'd found out today — that I was positive Doris had given my baby to some people living in our neighborhood.

Stop worrying

"Oh, Miss Mathis, I don't know what to do!" I cried. "Do you think there's any chance I can get my baby back now that the Ashtons have it?"

"Now stop worrying about it, honey," Miss Mathis said with a thoughtful frown on her face. "If what you suspect is true, I'm sure everything can be straightened out eventually. I think the first thing we'll do is have a little talk with your stepmother."

You should have seen the look on Doris' face when I walked into the house with Miss Mathis. She'd been lying on the couch watching television, but as soon as we came in she sat straight up, her eyes widening in bewilderment. It took her a moment to manage a lame smile.

"You should have told me you were married," company home, Sharon," she said. "Who's your friend?"

"Miss Mathis," I replied. "A teacher from school."

Miss Mathis stared at Doris steadily. "Sharon has just finished telling me some of the things that have been happening to her lately. What she's concerned about now is her baby that, she says, was born a little over a month ago."

Doris stiffened, a wariness flickering in her eyes. "What about it?"

"Sharon doesn't seem to think it was born dead as you said it was," Miss Mathis said coldly. "She thinks you've given it away to some people by the name of Ashton."

Doris shot to her feet, her face contorting in an ugly grimace. "Well, it's a lie!" she cried. "She's always been a liar — making up things out of her imagination. You surely don't believe her fantastic story!"

"It's not a lie!" I burst out. "I saw it today — the baby Mrs. Ashton has. And I know it's mine!"

"You don't know what you're talking about," Doris lashed back at me. "You're just trying to cause trouble and I'm telling you you'd better shut up about this or..."

Let authorities investigate

"You're not going to frighten Sharon with your threats if that's what you're trying to do," Miss Mathis broke in. "I think what we'll do is let the authorities investigate this and see what they come up with."

There was fear on Doris' face then, but she continued her act of false bravado. "The police will laugh when you tell them a story like this one. They'll laugh themselves silly!"

But the police didn't react in the way Doris said they would. A kindly, gray-haired detective carefully wrote down everything I told him and then promised he'd start an investigation right away.

It was only a week until Doris and Mr. and Mrs. Ashton were summoned into court. Eventually they were both given jail sentences for what was, in effect, the kidnapping of my baby. But all that mattered to me was the overwhelming joy I felt when my son was put into my arms at last. He was the most beautiful baby I'd ever seen in my life.

Thanks to Miss Mathis who arranged it, I'm living now in a foster home with some people named Bannister where I can have Travis Mathis Nichols with me. I babysit their two little girls while they work during the daytime and it's a whole new life for me. The Bannisters are such good, warm-hearted people that for the first time I'm finding out what a real home is like.

I haven't seen my father since I left home, and as far as I'm concerned he belongs to a part of my life I'd just as soon forget. It was Miss Mathis who was there when I needed somebody to help me. How wonderful it'd be if there were only more people like her in the world instead of those who make it a rule never to get involved in other people's lives.

Yes, I've been lucky in lots of ways. What's more, I feel God has His hand on me now - that He'll give me guidance during the rest of my life. I'm leaving my future with Him.

End

PEOPLE, QUOTATIONS & QUIPS

Billy Dee Williams: Sex Symbol

Billy Dee Williams first really became known as a sex symbol while playing the leading man of Diana Ross in the films, "Lady Sings the Blues," and "Mahogany." Billy Dee had this to say about the effect these roles have had on his career: "I went into those films with the attitude that I wanted to give something. I didn't want to take something away. And the result was that in giving I gained. It works that way."

Billy Dee Williams

PROS PASS — An increasing number of tennis pros are passing up tournaments in preference to outside endorsements and business deals and tennis champ Arthur Ashe explains the reasoning behind this action: "Big money no longer lures top players when they can make thousands of dollars off endorsements. It doesn't help a tournament when some of the best players pass it up."

Arthur Ashe

MOM CAN'T LOOK — Though Ken Norton has been successful in both boxing and acting, his mother just can't seem to watch her son in action on either the screen or in the ring. After seeing "Mandingo," Norton said, "She just threw up her hands and cried, 'Oh, my God! How can I ever go to church now?'" Ken's father loves to watch his son both on the screen and of course in the ring! Ken's latest film is "Drum."

Ken Norton

APOLOGY — Seems that Joe Simon has done some apologizing for cutting the song, "Let's Spend the Night Together." Because of the tune which clearly refers to the use of dope, black-oriented radio stations across the country were threatened with boycotts. After learning of the boycotts and an incident where one music director resigned because he had approved the tune and his station had received complaints about the song, Simon said, "I'm beginning to feel somewhat ashamed. I didn't want to turn off my fans."

Joe Simon

IN COURT AGAIN — Marvin Gaye has been involved in the courts again. This time it's for nonpayment of support to his former wife, Anna Gordy Gaye and their nine-year-old son, Marvin Jr. On two previous occasions, Gaye failed to make $5,550 monthly payments to Ms. Gaye and $500 to Marvin Jr. He was ruled in contempt of court then. Ms. Gaye charges that the nonpayment was willful since Gaye was able to pay the amount.

WEDDING BELLS — Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Indiana is no longer known as the bachelor mayor because a short while ago, he took that step into marriage. The popular mayor was married to Ruthelyn Marie Rowles of Boonville, Missouri, by the Rev. Jesse Jackson. The marriage was a first for both.
